USD Master Of Public Administration Program Receives Reaccreditation

VERMILLION — The University of South Dakota Master of Public Administration program was awarded full accreditation through August 2020 by the Commission on Peer Review and Accreditation of the Network of Schools of Public Policy, Affairs and Administration (NASPAA). The accreditation followed a review of the USD program's self-study report, submitted in 2012, and a Commission review team that visited campus last spring.

The Commission commended the program on its efforts to promote diversity and the site visit team report observed that "the M.P.A. working group faculty have been exemplary in their efforts to promote diversity." Founded in 1970, NASPAA is the global standard in public service education and was established to ensure excellence in education and training for public service and to promote the ideal of public service. USD's Master of Public Administration degree is the only NASPAA accredited program in the state.

"Achieving reaccreditation is evidence that USD's program is among the best in the nation," said William Richardson, Ph.D., Odeen-Swanson Distinguished Professor of Political Science and chair of the USD Department of Political Science. "It's a program that we're proud to offer as it's the only accredited M.P.A. program in the state, so it's no accident that many of our graduates go on to become leaders at the local, state and national levels."

The reaccreditation of seven years for USD's M.P.A. is the maximum period allowable by NASPAA. The Master of Public Administration, which includes seven full-time faculty, is a professional degree program that prepares students to serve as leaders in the public and nonprofit sector. Graduates of USD's public administration program serve at all levels of government and nonprofit organizations in the United States and abroad.

Publication: USD 'One Of Nation's Best'

VERMILLION — When it comes to providing students with an outstanding undergraduate educational experience, the University of South Dakota is one of the nation's best, according to The Princeton Review.

Students surveyed for "The Best 378 Colleges: 2014 Edition" praise USD for its wide selection of career placement services and described the Honors Program as "the best-kept secret in the country." Students also commented that USD "gives students many options as far as majors go" and that "the odds of getting into a professional or graduate program are good." USD is the lone South Dakota college or university featured in "The Best 378 Colleges: 2014 Edition," which was released today. This also is the 15th consecutive year that USD is featured in the education services company's college guidebook.

"The Princeton Review ranking validates that the University of South Dakota is committed to providing students with quality academic and research programs at an affordable cost," said James W. Abbott, president of the University of South Dakota. "From outstanding faculty to a distinguished Honors Program, USD offers students excellent value for their educational investment."

Only 15 percent of America's 2,500 four-year colleges and four colleges outside the United States are profiled in this year's guide, which does not rank colleges academically or numerically from 1 to 378 in any category.
