POPE

and many other places, as well as in the missions in the most remote parts of the world." In early evening, the pope, who turns 83 on April 16, was to fly by helicopter to the papal retreat in Castel Gandolfo, a lakeside town in the Alban Hills south of Rome, where he will greet pilgrims in the palace courtyard on Monday.

Benedict was holding up well against the campaign of "deceitful accusations" against him, Venice Cardinal Angelo Scola said in an interview on Italian state TV Sunday. Scola said he recently had dined with the pope, who was drawing on his "usual spiritual energy."

Easter Sunday Mass was the last major Holy Week appearance by the pope in Rome for the thousands of faithful who have poured into the city. They cheered Benedict at the end of Sunday's two-hour-long ceremony in the cobblestone square bedecked with daffodils, tulips and azaleas.

After the Mass, Benedict moved to the central balcony of St. Peter's Basilica to deliver his "Urbi et Orbi" message — Latin for "to the city and to the world" — which analyzes humanity's failings and hopes.

He singled out the "trials and sufferings," including persecution and even death, of Christians in Iraq and Pakistan, and of people in Haiti and Chile, devastated by earthquakes. He hoped for peaceful coexistence to win out over criminal violence in Latin American countries plagued by drug trafficking, and promised to pray for peace in the Middle East.

His speech ignored demands by victims that he shoulder some responsibility for a common practice by bishops in the past of shuffling pedophile priests from parish to parish rather than sully the church's reputation by defrocking clergy who raped, sodomized or otherwise sexually abused minors.

The accusations against the pope stem from his leadership as archbishop of Munich, in his native Germany, before he came to the Vatican three decades ago, as well as his long tenure in Rome leading the Holy See's office dealing with a growing pile of dossiers about pedophile priests.

"By the middle of 2009, we had already doubled the number of shelter nights for all of 2008. And we still had six months left to go in 2009."

The center had 634 shelter nights in 2008, and 1071 in 2009. So far in 2010, the shelter has 58. At its new location, the center will also house the Yankton family visitation center under its roof, Slaba said.

During Saturday's "Fitness For A Cause," participants can take part in any or all of the various classes on a first-come, first-served basis, Mueller said. Classes start each hour.

"Every class that you participate in, you receive a ticket to enter into a different drawing that we have," Mueller said. "Some participants may do all the classes, but you can do just one class. You don't need to do 12 hours straight."

The drawing for the hourly prizes will be held that day, Mueller said. The winner needs to be present.
