

WARREN

an effect on all of us."

She was 17 when she appeared on television as "Cinderella" and 21 when she married former hairdresser Jon Peters, who became a big-time movie producer. They had a son and divorced seven years later.

After the divorce she says she fell into a funk. "It wasn't about work. It was a spiritual or emotional bankruptcy that had to be filled by life's lessons that I had to learn that kept me in situations that were not good for me, people that were not good for me, wanting career to fill up places inside of me that couldn't. I had a lot to learn and re-learn, and to find myself separate from the effects of certain things in my life that have created a void in you."

Part of what sustains her now is her 10-year marriage to marketing and branding agent Ronald Taft — as well as Chinese medicine, acupuncture and homeopathy. "That's been very powerful for me," she says. "I'm also a very spiritual person. I do believe in God, in a higher power."

Her son, Christopher, works at the Sunset Gower Studios, procuring producers to shoot there. "I warned him about working in the business," she shakes her head. "It's in his blood, I suppose."

As for Warren, her disenchantment with La-La Land hasn't stopped her. "I don't think I'm tough in the ways that people generally consider tough. I don't have a tough demeanor, I don't walk in the world in that way. I don't have a tough way of expressing myself. I am very emotional and am very vulnerable. But what I know about myself, the older I get the more I know about myself."

"Chinese medicine — which is what I do — they call it having 'Shen' which means a big heart like a warrior. I have a strong, strong spirit. Even though I go to dark, shadowy kinds of places, my spirit is such that I come out of that with a larger, more comprehensive view of life and myself. That allows me to continue and carry on."
