BOSTON

Merga and Cheruyot ran shoulder-to-shoulder through parts of Newton and into Brookline, before the Kenyan inched ahead at Coolidge Corner with about 2.5 miles left and pulled away. Hall, who led most of the way last year, led early again before falling to 17th in Natick and then retaking the lead in Wellesley. He lost ground at the halfway point but with a sprint through the final mile was almost able to catch Merga on Boylston Street. "I always thought I had a shot to get back in it," said Hall, who is neighbors with Kefelegzi in Mammoth Lakes, Calif. "If you're trying to be the big elephant — the guy who gets to sit wherever — you've got to be confident." Erkesko opened a lead of more than 90 seconds and held on, grabbing her side as she ran along Beacon Street in the last four miles. Defending champion Salina Kosgei was third, and Paige Higgins of Clampton, Ariz., was the top American woman in 13th. The men's wheelchair race was also close, with South African Ernst Van Dyk finishing 4 seconds ahead of Krige Schabert for his ninth win — an all-divisions record in Boston. Van Dyk has won three in a row, and he also won six consecutive years from 2000-06; Jean Driscoll won eight Boston women's wheelchair races. Wakako Tsuchida of Japan won her fourth straight women's wheelchair title.

Chicago's James Johnson that could be one of the best — and most ferocious — of his career. Staring from the left side, James drove to his right past Johnson down the foul line, reached back like a baseball pitcher looking for more velocity on his fastball and powered his jam over a stunned Johnson as Cleveland's sellout crowd gasped and then erupted. The dunk shook the backboard, not the Bulls. They trailed by 10 points early in walked directly to Stewart, who was only halfway out of the car, still sitting on the door frame. Stewart put his hand on Gordon's shoulder and they then walked away toward the pits talking to each other and trying to figure out what happened. Once the track was cleaned up and the red flag was withdrawn after nearly 21 minutes, Jeff Burton was on the inside and Hamlin on the outside when the race restarted. Burton, who took only two tires on the same stop as Stewart, didn't have enough left to challenge and slipped all the way to finish 11th. Johnson sustained damage on the front left bumper of his car when he got loose with 94 laps left and was hit by teammate Gordon, who is listed as the owner of the No. 48 car. That got Johnson out of sequence on pit stops when he had to make a stop to fix a flat tire, and
