Why Is Excessive Idling Considered Severe Duty?

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

Dear Tom and Ray:
Why in the world is "excessive idling" defined as "severe duty" in all owner's manuals? I read in one column that idling is harder on the valve train than running at red-line! What's the explanation? Lower oil pressure? Hotter oil? I'm crossing my fingers for an answer, as I've asked this question many times of many different people, and I still don't have any idea.

TOM: Well, I happen to be an excessive idler, Frank. And my ex-wives will all tell you that having me around was definitely "severe duty."

RAY: "Severe duty," in automotive terms, is a collection of conditions listed in most owner's manuals. If you meet those conditions, it's recommended that you change your oil more frequently than everyone else.

TOM: In the old days, excessive idling was listed probably because cars ran so rich. Carburetors dumped buckets of gasoline into the cylinders. Some of it was combusted, and some of it wasn't. The gasoline that didn't combust just ran down the walls of the cylinders, and some of it snuck past the rings into the oil pan.

RAY: That diluted the oil with gasoline. And since diluted oil doesn't lubricate as well as pure oil, it makes sense to change it more often.

TOM: Nowadays, cars rarely run rich. But the reason they recommend more-frequent oil changes for excessive idlers – like police cars and taxis – is because it means your engine is running for more hours than your mileage indicates.

RAY: In other words, if you idle in front of the senior center for five hours a day trying to pick up chicks, like my brother does, you'll have added zero miles to your odometer, yet your oil will have been working to lubricate your engine for five hours.

TOM: And if you wait until 7,500 miles go by before changing the oil, your oil may be overdue for a change by then.

RAY: This is one reason why manufacturers like GM and Honda now have oil-change indicators on the dashboard. They measure the amount of time the engine runs and the conditions under which it runs, and then use an algorithm to figure out how much life is left in your oil.

TOM: It's a better system than using mileage alone. Not only do you not wait too long between oil changes, but you don't change the oil too OFTEN, either. So you save money and room in our landfills.

UNL IVY DAY CEREMONIES PLANNED FOR SUNDAY

LINCOLN, Neb. — Students,

faculty members and alumni will be honored by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln at its annual Ivy Day ceremonies April 2.

The event, co-sponsored by Mortar Board and the Innocents Society, recognizes the outstanding contribution of students selected to serve in the two organizations, as well as the achievements of current members and notable underclassmen and seniors.

Ceremonies begin at 10 a.m. at the Nebraska Champions Club, 701 Stadium Drive, and conclude with the traditional planting of the ivy by the 2011-12 presidents of the societies, Alex Brodersen of Coleridge for the Mortar Boards and Callie Helms of Sioux Falls, S.D., for the Innocents Society.

The Innocents Society inducts 13 new members each spring, with selection based on leadership, scholarship and service to the university and greater community.

New members of Mortar Board are tapped into the Black Masque Chapter each spring by Mortar Boarders wearing black masks and robes. The 20 new members were selected on the basis of outstanding scholarship, leadership and service to the university and community.

Following is a list by hometown of the area 2011 inductees into the Innocents Society and the Black Masque Chapter of Mortar Board. Information includes organization, academic major(s) and parents' names.

Coleridge: Alex Brodersen, Mortar Board president, forensic science/pre-medicine, Dennis and Sue Brodersen.
