White House with the chief congressional antagonists, rejected a Republican proposal for an interim bill with sharp cuts and then announced Boehner and Reid would meet later in the day.

If they can't sort out their differences, he said, "I want them back here tomorrow."

And if that doesn't work, he added, "we'll invite them again the day after that. And I will have my entire team available to work through the details of getting a deal done."

Obama, eager to regain the confidence of independent voters as he seeks a new term, said the American public expects that its leaders "act like grown-ups, and when we are in negotiations like this, that everybody gives a little bit, compromises a little bit in order to do the people's business."

At issue is legislation needed to keep the government running through the Sept. 30 end of the budget year, and a desire by all sides to avoid being blamed politically if there is a shutdown.

Twin closures in the mid-1990s boomeranged on Republicans when Newt Gingrich was speaker, helping Bill Clinton win re-election in 1996.

This year, both the White House and lawmakers have used the threat of a shutdown to seek leverage in the talks.

Republicans issued a 13-page pamphlet during the day providing guidance to congressional offices on operations during a shutdown. Boehner's office said Monday night the document had been prepared "in the event Senate Democrats shut down the government."

Reid's spokesman, Jon Summers, likened the maneuver to a "dress rehearsal for a shutdown that the tea party so desires."

But one Republican official said it was a response to a memo on Monday distributed by Jeffrey Zients, deputy director of Obama's Office of Management and Budget.

Zients wrote that all parties wish to avoid a shutdown but, "given the realities of the calendar, good management requires that we continue contingency planning for an orderly shutdown should the negotiations not be completed by ... this coming Friday."

New to power, House Republicans grabbed onto the need for a spending bill last January as a way to force spending cuts on reluctant Democrats and the president. An initial House-passed measure, which included $61 billion in cuts and dozens of unrelated provisions, drew a veto threat from Obama and fell short of the 60 votes needed for passage in the Senate.

At the same time, several Senate Democrats joined with Republicans to reject an alternative measure to continue spending at current levels — a post-election signal that they, too, wanted to see cuts take effect.

In the weeks since, Congress has approved two stopgap bills, containing a total of $10 billion in cuts at Republican insistence, and Obama has signed both into law.

In the interim, talks on the longer-term bill have grown increasingly acrimonious. Democrats said Boehner would eventually have to part company from tea party-backed lawmakers who propelled Republicans to power, and they accused him of reneging on an agreement to cut $33 billion.

In return, Republicans accused Democrats of resorting to budget gimmicks to make it look like they favored deep cuts, when in fact they sought higher spending.

On Monday, Boehner informed rank-and-file Republicans he would seek passage of a new stopgap bill, a week-long measure that includes $12 billion in cuts and funds the Defense Department through the end of the year.

Obama rejected it. He said he would sign an interim bill only if one were needed to get the paperwork together on a broader agreement and pass it through both houses.

"What we're not going to do is to once again put off something that should have gotten done several months ago," he said. Obama didn't say so, but that was an implied jab at Democrats, who had control of both houses of Congress last year and were unable to pass a budget or any of the 12 annual spending bills.

Grim Sleeper May Have 8 More Victims

BY CHRISTINA HOAG
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Los Angeles detectives said Tuesday they believe the suspect in the "Grim Sleeper" serial killings could be responsible for up to eight additional murders, but say the likelihood is strongest for three women whose photos were found in a secret stash in a refrigerator.

Police asked for the public's help in locating the three women and displayed their photos at a news conference, along with four others whose families reported them missing in the neighborhood where suspect Lonnie Franklin Jr. lived.

"Obviously, we hope for the best, but the circumstances are gloomy," said Detective Dennis Kilcoyne, who heads a taskforce dedicated to the serial murders. "These women have not been seen in a long, long time."

An eighth victim is believed to be an unsolved murder dating from 1988.

Franklin, a mechanic, was arrested last July and indicted earlier this month on 10 counts of murder and one attempted murder in connection with a string of shooting and strangling slayings that started in the 1980s and extended into the 2000s. All of the victims had troubled lives, many involving drugs and prostitution.

Franklin has pleaded not guilty and is in jail awaiting trial.

Police are focusing on the three women because their IDs and photos were found in a fridge in Franklin's garage in a stash that also contained a picture of a woman Franklin is charged with killing — Janecia Peters.

Kilcoyne said this small stash was apart from pictures of hundreds of others of women, many sexually explicit, found throughout Franklin's house. Since Peters was later found murdered, he said he fears the other women met a similar fate.

"We feel there's some significance to that," the detective said.

The small collection contained the Nevada ID and sexually explicit photos of Rolenia Morris, 29, who disappeared in September 2005, the high school ID of Ayellah Marshall, 18, who went missing in February 2005, the photo of an unidentified woman, and another photo of a woman that was too dark to make out, as well as the picture of Peters, he said.

Frank Marshall, Ayellah's father, said he hoped some information will result about what happened to his daughter. "We'd like some kind of closure," he said. "It's painful, waiting daily, expecting to hear the worst.

Another four missing women detectives believe could be Franklin's victims were brought to police attention by family members after his arrest last July. They have been identified as: Cathern or Catherine Davis, 29, missing since 1982; Rosalind Giles, 27, missing since 1991; Lisa Knox, 29, missing since 1993; and Anita Parker, missing since 1998.

Kilcoyne said the four women were known to be involved in drugs and prostitution and to frequent the area near Franklin's home where the other victims were located, but have not been definitively linked to Franklin. Police are seeking any information that could connect them to him.

Investigators believe Franklin was responsible for killing an eighth possible victim, Inez Warren, who was shot in the chest with a small caliber handgun and left in an alleyway off Western Avenue in 1988. She later died at a local hospital.

Kilcoyne said the way in which she was killed closely resembles other murders attributed to Franklin and she was known to be involved in drugs and prostitution, like the other victims. Police are seeking any information that could tie Warren to Franklin.

"I know it's a longshot but it has all the characteristics of the other cases," Kilcoyne said.

Detectives also asked for the public's help in identifying photos of 55 women found in Franklin's house, the last of 180 photos police released to the public in December in order to eliminate them from a victim list. Just that morning, he said, another woman in a picture came forward.

Some of the photos appear to be of women sleeping — Kilcoyne said none of those have been identified.

The killer was dubbed the Grim Sleeper because the killings appeared to stop in 1988 and did not resurface until 2002. But Kilcoyne said he believes there are many other victims.

"We're going to start filling in that gap," he said. "I don't think he stopped for a minute."

Kilcoyne noted that Franklin's wife and son have not cooperated with police.

The detective said he did not anticipate charges to result from any of these new cases, saying that police are satisfied with the 11 counts that Franklin has been indicted on. The absence of bodies also makes homicide prosecutions tough, police Chief Charlie Beck added.

But Kilcoyne said victims' families are owed answers and noted that Franklin's indictment enabled detectives to release this latest information. "We're still scratching away on the case," he said.

Little Support For Marriage Alternative In Rhode Island

BY DAVID KLEPPER
Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A proposal to extend some of the rights of marriage to same-sex couples and others who can't legally marry, such as siblings, is winning little support amid Rhode Island's debate over legalizing gay marriage.

The legislation would grant some rights associated with insurance coverage, health care decisions and inheritance to so-called "reciprocal beneficiaries." Relatives would also be eligible for the legal relationship so long as each relative is single and over 18. Any two people who could legally marry would be ineligible.

A handful of states around the nation have created similar legal relationships. In Rhode Island, the idea is one of several alternatives being considered this year to a proposal to legalize gay marriage.

The legislation has groups on both sides of the gay marriage debate in rare agreement: neither side likes the idea of reciprocal beneficiaries, but for different reasons. No one spoke in favor of the measure at a legislative hearing Tuesday night.

Kara Russo, an opponent of gay marriage, said she worries that a reciprocal beneficiary law is a first step to full marriage for gay couples.

"It's a Trojan horse," Russo said. "They know this will get them same-sex marriage. This is their backup plan."

But groups behind the gay marriage bill oppose a reciprocal beneficiary bill because it wouldn't extend full marriage rights. Kathy Kushnir, executive director of Marriage Equality Rhode Island, said in a statement that same-sex couples "deserve nothing less than equal access to marriage."

Two people with reciprocal beneficiary status could make decisions about the other's medical care, receive coverage under the other person's insurance and be treated as spouses when it comes to inheritance law. But they wouldn't receive many other rights awarded through marriage — including child custody rights, child support, tax credits and incentives and veterans and Social Security benefits.

Hawaii was the first state to adopt a similar law giving some of the rights of marriage to same-sex couples as well as relatives.

Thomas Coleman, executive director of the group Unmarried America, noted that two unmarried people can use legal contracts to receive the same benefits of a reciprocal beneficiary law. His group, which advocates for single people, opposes reciprocal beneficiary laws because unmarried heterosexual couples aren't eligible.

"We've got this mixed bag of experiments from around the country with civil unions and domestic partnerships," he said. "But marriage is still on the pedestal, and then there's this lesser institution for the poor suckers that can't get married."

Woman Gets 20 Years In Strangling

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — A woman who admitted strangling her "disrespectful" 18-year-old daughter on a college campus was sentenced Tuesday to 20 years in prison.

She was also ordered to have no contact with her surviving child.

Stacy Pagli, 38, was sentenced in Westchester County Court following her guilty plea to first-degree manslaughter.

The plea deal was offered after doctors for both sides agreed Pagli was emotionally disturbed when she killed Marissa Pagli at Manhattanville College in Purchase. She was originally charged with murder.

In court on Tuesday, she signed an order of protection for her 4-year-old daughter.

Marissa Pagli, a freshman at the school, was killed in February 2010 in the family's on-campus apartment. Her father, John Pagli, a maintenance supervisor at the college, found the body.

He sobbed in court on Tuesday and told acting state Supreme Court Justice Richard Molea, "I am forced to live with a broken heart that's beyond repair."

Stacy Pagli told police she had killed her daughter because she "pushed my last button" and was "disrespectful all the time."

After the killing, Stacy Pagli tried to commit suicide by cutting her left wrist and hanging herself on a doorknob, prosecutors said. While in jail, she tried killing herself by tying socks around her neck, they said.

According to police accounts of Pagli's statements after the killing, the mother said her daughter was "disrespectful all the time." She said she told her daughter, "This will be the last time you speak to me like that."

When police asked what prompted Marissa to be disrespectful, her mother said, "I asked her where she was going," according to the police accounts.

Pagli also expressed regret, telling police, "I wish I could take it back, but I can't. I can't make it better."
