Duling Earns Great West Honors

NAPERVILLE, Ill. — South Dakota sophomore Alexa Duling has been named the Great West Conference Female Athlete of the Week in Track and Field, the league announced on Wednesday. It is the eighth time a Coyote Track and Field athlete has earned the honor this year.

Duling (Gregory) earned her first career weekly honor after an outstanding performance at the Coyotes' Double Dual vs. South Dakota State and North Dakota on April 9. Duling won the 400 hurdles with a personal best time of 1:00.58, narrowly missing the school record, and added a win in the 100 hurdles with a time of 14.48. Duling's 400 hurdles time is tops in the Great West Conference this season, while her 100 hurdles is second-best.

Duling is part of a Coyote contingent that will compete at the Mt. SAC Relays starting Thursday in Walnut, Calif. Several Coyote athletes will compete at the Sioux City Relays as well this weekend.

Canadian Guard Signs With USD

VERMILLION — South Dakota head men's basketball coach Dave Boots has announced that standout Brandon Bos of Markham, Ontario, Canada, has signed a letter of intent to continue his career with the Coyotes starting in the fall of 2011.

Bos is a 6-foot-1 guard who attended prep school at The Kiski School in Saltsburg, Pa., in 2010-11, where he posted an outstanding season. Bos averaged 19 points, five assists and two steals per game last season in helping Kiski to a 26-9 overall mark. Kiski finished undefeated in the Independent Preparatory School League in claiming the championship. Bos averaged 22 points per game over the last 10 games of the season. He played for former Division I and NBA coach Daryn Freedman last season.

"Brandon will be a great addition to our team," Boots said. "He is a complete player who will make his teammates better. He's a great student with a 4.0 GPA and has leadership abilities. With his talent and attitude he can be an impact-level player."

Bos also had an outstanding high school playing career at Markham District High School in Ontario, Canada. As a senior in 2009-10 he averaged 27 points, six rebounds, four assists and two steals per game while shooting 54 percent from the field, including 47 percent from three-point range. He had a season-high of 39 points in a contest against Alex MacKenzie.

Bos led the GTA with the greatest number of games with 25 points or more. He was named the Toronto Star Athlete of the Week and named five times as part of the Toronto Star Top 10 Performances of the Week. He was also selected to the Canadian Class 2010 "Top 50 Players by Position."

As a junior, Bos averaged 17.3 points and 4.9 rebounds per game in 2008-09. He was named the camp MVP of the Syracuse Big Orange Camp in 2009.

Bos also was a member of the prestigious AAU Grassroots Canada team, where he played for Coach Ro Russell.

Bos joins Nimrod Hilliard IV of Madison, Wis., and Terrell Brown of Colorado Springs, Colo., as Coyote recruits for 2011-12. The Coyotes are expected to announce more signings in the weeks ahead.

BONDS

Levenson of Loyola University Law School. "I think people will still realize how hard it was to bring a case like this. But I doubt federal prosecutors will be walking away from cases like this. In fact, this will probably embolden them."

Bonds, arguably the biggest name to emerge from the federal investigation into the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative, could receive up to 10 years in prison for his obstruction-of-justice conviction, though federal guidelines call for 15-21 months. For similar offenses in the BALCO case, the judge in the Bonds case has sentenced defendants to home confinement.

Whether or not baseball's all-time home run leader is incarcerated, the case once again brought up questions about the government's role in fighting doping in sports.

"What bothers me is that you've got a very powerful federal government that has the money and time and resources to ruin someone's reputation," said Rep. Jack Kingston of Georgia, who last month questioned the Food and Drug Administration about its bankrolling of parts of the investigation into Armstrong. "Why did it take eight years to get to this point on Barry Bonds? And with all the problems we've got, why are we sitting here at the end of an eight-year investigation?"

The answer, according to the government and those in the anti-doping community: Because the cases are worth pursuing, both on their own merits and because of the messages they send about the need to play fair — at the highest levels, all the way down to little league.

The prosecutors, of course, make their biggest headlines when they reach for the big boys.

Armstrong, the seven-time Tour de France winner, has long been accused of doping despite his long and vehement string of denials and the fact that he has never tested positive. Led by BALCO investigator Jeff Novitzky, who now works for the FDA, the U.S. government has been looking into the cyclist's case for nearly 12 months. Armstrong's representatives declined comment when asked about the Bonds verdict.

Meanwhile, Clemens is scheduled to go on trial in July for lying to Congress for denying using steroids. His attorney, Rusty Hardin, declined comment.

The Clemens case is one of the many with roots that can be traced to BALCO, which, according to the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency, has resulted in the suspension of 25 athletes and coaches in Olympic sports along with the forfeiture of more than 30 Olympic medals, U.S. titles and world records. It also helped lead to the drafting of the Mitchell Report, which outed many of baseball's best players, including Clemens, for alleged steroid use.

"BALCO was a game changer in preventing fraud, corruption and illicit drug use from ruining our country's sports," said USADA's Travis Tygart, in explaining the importance of the government investigation.

He said Wednesday's verdict "sends a clear message to those who have participated in criminal activity that nobody is above the law."

Some experts, however, think American investigators may have been hurt by the jury's somewhat head-scratching conclusion. It found Bonds guilty of obstruction of justice but did so without reaching decisions on charges that he lied to the grand jury when he said he never knowingly took steroids or HGH, and when he said he was never injected by anyone except his doctors.

"A verdict like this doesn't necessarily vindicate those who favor these prosecutions," said Robert Mintz, a high-profile defense attorney in New Jersey. "To me, it raises questions about the Roger Clemens case and any others that might be brought in the future, as to whether or not the time and expense government puts into these cases is really warranted."

BALCO founder Victor Conte, who spent four months in jail for money laundering and a steroid distribution charge, said the Bonds case is really proof of the government's determination to make examples out of so-called celebrity defendants.

FANNING

"It hasn't been awkward at all — it's been a lot of fun."

Transitioning to MMC next year could be difficult for Fanning because she not only has to adjust to college life, but to a different style of play as well, Winter said.

"(Playing softball) will be different, but she will be able to adjust. Hitting is already hard enough, but she'll have to change her swing to the different style of pitching," he said. "It'll take some time for her to realize which pitches are being thrown at her and get her timing down. She picks up on stuff quickly so I don't think it'll be a big problem. It'll be interesting to see how she reacts."

Fernandez said despite some of the differences between baseball and softball, Fanning will have basic understanding that comes with both sports.

"Obviously the games are different in terms of dimensions and equipment," he said. "Some strategies are similar, I just think the fact of playing a game that is comparable to the game of softball will help her. There's obviously going to be some transition and she understands that, but just that experience of situations and those opportunities you get when playing a game whether it be baseball or softball will definitely help her."

Like always, Fanning said she is up to the challenge of the transition.

"I don't think it will be very difficult to switch back to softball. It'll probably be a little challenging at first, but it won't take long to get the swing of things," she said.

Fanning has the competitiveness and the will to learn that will make her a leader for the team, Fernandez said. He said MMC is a good fit for Fanning and he is looking forward to her career there.

"She's a good athlete and I'm excited to see what she can do in the future," Fernandez said. "She's got the potential, we're just excited to have her put in the time necessary to be a good college softball player in the future."
