

SUPPORT

Both Cale and Kleinschmit run the page. This involves posting updates, reading and responding to comments, and looking into information and suggestions provided by others.

Kathy Cale, Trystan's mother, has been surprised by the amount of effort her daughter has devoted to her cause.

"I didn't think her teachers meant that much to her," Kathy said. "She wants her education, and she wants to go to college. And I don't think I realized just how much until she started that page."

Along with missing her teachers, Trystan said she would also be negatively affected by the cuts if she is forced into larger classes.

"Personally, I don't do well with big classes," she said. "I'd rather have a class of 20 people so the teacher has one-on-one time with us."

Even though the Facebook page has received a good response, Trystan continues to look for other ways to reach people. She is attempting to get T-shirts made that say "Yankton Wants Our Teachers Back." She would also like to get a large group of her friends to do community service while wearing the shirts.

While the ultimate goal is to get some of the teachers back, Trystan knows that might not be possible. Nevertheless, she feels the effort is worth it.

"If I can't get my teachers back, at least this will show them they can't take anything else away with budget cuts without a fight," she said.
