Nebraska Man Gets Prison For Sex Texts With Minn. Teen

CROFTON, Neb. (AP) — A 50-year-old Crofton man has been given 12 years in federal prison for receiving and transporting child pornography.

A news release from the office of U.S. Attorney Deborah Gilg says Michael Tramp was sentenced on Monday. His sentence includes five years of supervised release after he leaves prison.

Tramp was arrested last May after an investigation by the Minnesota, Nebraska and federal authorities.

The release says that over 18 months that ended with his arrest, Tramp had been exchanging text messages with a 13-year-old Minnesota girl. At his request, she also sent photos of herself in sexually explicit poses.

In April 2010, her mother reported the texts and messages to her local sheriff's office.

The town where the girl and her mother live was not disclosed.

programs, he said.

"We (at Yankton) delayed it further than any other school district," he said.

Reduced state aid isn't the only pressure on school districts, the Yankton board members said. Open enrollment has created competition among districts, and the shift of even a few students creates a major budget impact, they said.

The elimination of busing and switching to mileage payments for parents might save money, Specht said. However, ending busing could cause families in outlying areas to attend neighboring districts, particularly those that offer transportation, he said.

The same fears about open enrollment apply to cutting extracurricular activities, Specht said. The Yankton School District spends $700,000 on activities, recouping $100,000 at the gate.

The district views the activities as important in themselves for student development, he said. At the same time, families will go where their children can participate in those offerings, he said.

"We view extracurricular activities as an extension of the classroom," he said. "Our fear is that, if we trim (those offerings) significantly, we will lose students. If Gayville, Bon Homme and Avon want to offer those activities, students will want to go there."

The Yankton Booster Club has helped ease costs by paying for meals on road trips and at tournaments, Fitzgerald said. The district has also worked to hold down its activity expenses, he said.

One audience member submitted a question asking about cutting activity schedules and reducing travel, particularly long road trips such as Rapid City and the Black Hills.

"We would save $3,000 not making a trip to Rapid City," Specht said. "But then Rapid City wouldn't come here to play, and we would lose $3,000 to $4,000 in gate receipts."

The South Dakota High School Activities Association (SDHSAA) sets a maximum number of events for each activity, Specht said.

"Do they set a minimum? No," he said. "But if you don't have a

Sen. Colby Coash seeks to change trustee reporting requirements for Wyuka Cemetery in Lincoln, a state-chartered cemetery holds nearly 1,000 Civil War veterans.

The proposal also would add the cemetery to a state list of tax-exempt entities.

Coash said the proposal would not give the cemetery any kind of financial advantage over competitors, because it has never paid sales taxes to operate its funeral home or other services.

Lawmakers advanced the bill, 31-0, through the first of three required votes.

Extension Small-Acreage Living Seminar On April 30 In Yankton

BROOKINGS — Small-acreage owners can get valuable insight and information on managing their properties during an April 30 seminar in Yankton.

The South Dakota Cooperative Extension Service will host the training and it takes place from 9 a.m.-3:30 p.m. at the 4-H Pine Acres Fairgrounds, 709 Whiting Dr., Yankton. The seminar costs $15 per person and registration is due before April 27.

The training will answer questions such as what people need to do when they own too much land to keep it mowed with a lawn mower, but not enough for conventional agriculture. The program includes a wide range of educational topics that can be useful for owners of small acreages. The main topics include what to expect and plan for when living in rural areas, how to incorporate science-based research to properly raise fruits, vegetables, and livestock, and guidelines and procedures for weed control and management.

After sessions on Extension services available and integrated specific number of events, you can't participate in regional play-offs and events."

Another submitted question asked about the impact of state and federal regulations, particularly unfunded mandates.

"Where do you start?" Specht asked. "Our board constantly responds to state and federal mandates."

Specht then listed requirements ranging from special needs to a personal finance course. Schools are also required to work with young students on determining career tracks, he said.

"How do you fund new positions as they come on board?" he asked.

Staff members also deal with programs ranging from new math standards — doubling from 220 to nearly 500 — and No Child Left Behind, Specht said.

"Our teachers are constantly adjusting to (regulations from) the South Department of Education, the Legislature and the federal government," he said.

The Yankton School District must also remain competitive with other school districts in terms of salaries, the board said. In response to a question about the district's administrative pay, the board noted that Yankton actually ranks near the bottom of the fellow Eastern South Dakota (ESD) conference members in terms of both administration numbers and pay.

In addition, the Yankton district has a much higher percentage of its staff with advanced degrees, the board said.

The Yankton schools must also remain competitive with the statewide average for its teacher pay, the board members said. In that way, the district can not only recruit teachers but retain its high quality of education, they said.

Despite recent cuts, the Yankton school staff has continued to do what is best for the district, Specht told the Press & Dakotan after the meeting.

"(Our staff members) are in a very unique position. Most people whose positions are eliminated are not in a situation remotely (similar) to what (their) position would be," he said.

"I just think they have handled it professionally. The board is very proud of how (the teachers and staff) have come together to support the board and administration and have allowed us to move forward the best we can."

pest management for weeds, participants can select from a group of breakout sessions. Information presented in breakout sessions will fall into two different tracts. One tract will be specific to horticulture-based information and the other focuses on livestock and acreages.

The horticulture choice covers topics like selecting and growing fruit, marketing products locally, planning and protecting shelterbelts and trees, and how to control wildlife and keep them out of gardens or away from new trees. Participants who take the livestock breakout sessions will learn "Raising chickens 101," raising sheep and goats, how to determine the number of animals an acreage can support, hay quality and horse management, and standards for animal care.
