THANK YOU

The family of Harold Kuehler would like to thank everyone who in any way helped us through the loss of our father, grandfather, and great grandfather. For everyone who stopped by our homes, brought food to the houses or to the funeral luncheon, or helped with the lunch itself. Thank you also for all the plants, flowers and other memorials. To the choir, organist, and soloist Mike McDonald at the funeral mass. To Fr. Mike and Deacon Marcus of St. Rose Church for the wonderful mass. A special thank you to all the staff at Bloomfield Good Samaritan Society for the excellent care dad received the last 3 1/2 years. Finally, to the Wintz & Ray Funeral Home for providing such professional and compassionate care of our families throughout the entire funeral process.

Coach

"There's such a variety," he said. "It's just a matter of stepping in and being a part of it."

Rogers, a USA Archery Level 4 instructor and NFAA Master Coach, teaches a variety of students, from the young beginner to the experienced Olympian. While there is a wide gap in talent, he said the two extremes have more in common than one might think.

"They're actually quite similar in that a beginning archer has no preconceived notion on what is good or bad, and ultimately, that is where an Olympian needs to go," he said.

Once a coach at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in Chula Vista, Calif., Rogers has had extensive experience training archers at the highest level. He coached a Canadian archer in the 2004 games in Athens, Greece, and is currently working with four individuals who are vying for various Olympic positions. He is also involved with the U.S. Paralympic team.

He said that once archers reach that level, the physical part of the sport takes a back seat to the mental side. Since the Olympic archers shoot outdoors primarily at 70 meters, it can be a significant challenge for them to maintain their abilities in those elements. While this part of his job is the most challenging, Rogers said it is also extremely rewarding.

"Watching an archer become more comfortable in their skin while they perform is probably one of the most interesting components of what I do," he said.

Rogers also spends a lot of time working with children, and the archery center has made a concerted effort to reach out to junior archers.

The complex hosts an after-school program for elementary and middle school students, and plans are in the works to start a junior Olympic archery development program (JOAD). JOAD is a nationwide program that helps develop youth in both compound and recurve archery, and it will serve as a stand-alone archery club on the junior level.

Rogers said he thoroughly enjoys working with beginning archers and seeing the progress they make over time.

"That's the best part — watching someone that is able to take a skill that seems at the beginning very cumbersome and turn it into something that looks effortless," he said.

Before moving to Yankton, Rogers worked primarily for the World Archery Festival. He was also the liaison between the NFAA and the U.S. Olympic Committee and managed all the archery programs at the Chula Vista U.S. Olympic Training Center. When the NFAA moved its headquarters from Redlines, Calif., to Yankton in 2008, Rogers and his wife Marihelen, executive secretary for the NFAA, followed the association.

Rogers said the biggest adjustment has been getting used to the South Dakota winters, which are much more "aggressive" than he had previously experienced living in California and Illinois. The weather has also made him focus more on indoor archery during the winter months.

While the temperatures might be colder than what he is used to, Rogers said the warm reception from the area has helped ease the transition.

"The community has been very welcoming, and I've made a number of friends and developed many relationships," he said. "It's a very friendly atmosphere here in Yankton."

State Historical Society Offers Disaster Preparedness Advice

PIERRE — In 2005 the Heritage Health Index reported that few cultural heritage institutions have disaster plans or that the plans are outdated. Every year on May 1, historical societies, archives, museums, libraries are encouraged to spend some time preparing their organization for a disaster.

"It's easy to postpone working on a disaster plan when we're so engrossed in our daily activities, but if we dedicate time on May 1 to do a few actions that may make a difference if an emergency does happen," said Chelle Somsen, State Archivist for the South Dakota State Historical Society at the Cultural Heritage Center in Pierre. "Updating the contact list, asking staff review to the disaster plan, checking to make sure the fire extinguishers and smoke detectors are working, and making sure all the collections are off the floor and not blocking exits are a few ideas of actions that can take place on May Day."

This year the State Historical Society-Archives staff will update their pocket response plans and perform an inventory of disaster supplies on May Day. All State Historical Society staff will also partake in fire extinguisher training.

"These are actions that we can take without the whole process becoming overwhelming," Somsen said. If an organization needs assistance with preparing a disaster plan they are encouraged to contact the State Archives at (605) 773-3804 or archref@state.sd.us.

The archives is open Monday through Friday and the first Saturday of each month from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. CDT.

Neb. Officials Honor Hartington For Development Efforts

HARTINGTON, Neb. — Nebraska state officials are spotlighting Hartington's accomplishments in celebration of federal Community Development Week.

The Cedar County, Neb., seat has a population of 1,554. Realizing the need to keep pace with economic changes facing the community, Hartington conducted surveys, leadership retreats, and town hall meetings from 2006-2009 to identify projects for the city and surrounding county. A comprehensive plan was completed this past December.

Hartington also was designated an Economic Development Certified Community in May 2010. Some of its many projects include construction of a new $2.5 million activity center at the Cedar Catholic Junior-Senior High School, renovation of the Senior Citizen Center, and the Westfield Acres Housing Development.

Other projects include a $2.3 million renovation of and addition to the Cedar County Courthouse, a new fire truck, passage of LB840 Local Municipal Sales Tax for future economic development, and a four-phase improvement project involving Feller Park.
