meeting famous writers. It makes their work richer for the show.”

“The White Museum” was selected in 2010 for the Autumn House Poetry Series and also won the inaugural Lantern Award from the Cleveland Lit. His other books include “Haywire,” which won the May Swenson Poetry Award in 2006, and “The Good Kiss,” which was chosen by U.S. Poet Laureate Billy Collins to win the University of Akron Poetry Prize in 2001.

Bilgere was the 2003 recipient of the Cleveland Arts Prize in Literature, the 2006 winner of the Ohioana Poetry Award, and a 2009 winner of a Pushcart Prize. He has given readings at the Library of Congress, the 92nd Street Y in New York, the Bread Loaf Writer’s Conference, and at schools and libraries around the country. His work has appeared in dozens of journals and anthologies, including Best American Poetry, The Kenyon Review, Poetry, The Southern Review, Ploughshares, Field, Shenandoah, and The Sewanee Review.

“My stuff, which tends to be funny, tends to deal with the plight of the aging male in our culture — the guy who’s surprisingly turned middle aged and someone shunted to the sidelines and struggling with the inevitability of getting older,” Bilgere said.

Reese said he has been a fan of Bilgere’s work ever since he heard Garrison Keillor read it on National Public Radio’s the Writer’s Almanac two years ago.

“I laughed so hard I had to pull the car over,” he said. “Finally, I thought, a poet who isn’t trying to put on an act. I went out and bought his book. Then I called him and invited him to come to Mount Marty.”

According to Reese, The Great Plains Writers’ Tour is comprised of a series of readings and discussion programs that explore various arts and humanities components. Through poetry and prose presentations, authors carry on a tradition of storytelling that is rooted in Midwestern and Plains culture.

Previous authors include former United States poet laureate Ted Kooser, American Book Award winner Maria Mazziotti Gillan, Elizabeth Cook-Lynn, David Lee, and William Kloefer, amongst others.

As part of the tour, Bilgere will have the opportunity to visit with students, which he said is one of his favorite aspects of visiting colleges and universities.

“The thing I like most is meeting the students that have some interest and appreciation for poetry and are kind enough to turn out and listen to me read my stuff,” he said. “That’s a real thrill. That’s why you write — to reach people, to communicate something to them about yourself and your view of the world and of poetry.”

Bilgere said he is also looking forward to Tuesday night’s reading, and he is hoping for a great turnout.

“I think people will enjoy the reading, and I look forward to getting out there and meeting some new friends,” he said.

that got flushed through the dam last summer were young, so there’s still a strong adult population of rainbow smelt that could reproduce and bring the numbers back up.

“What it really hinges on is whether we have a good spawn this year.”

Biologists and anglers had worried about a repeat of 1997, when hundreds of millions of baitfish were sucked through the dam, leaving Oahe’s walleyes starving and skinny.

Many believe that there were too many rainbow smelt in the population in 1997 and the flood just gave it a little kick, Fincel said. He said the population numbers from the early 1990s are a better target for the system.

The lack of snowpack from a warm, dry winter has resulted in a very small rise in water levels this spring. The success of a season’s spawn depends on numerous variables, which include how the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers manages the river dams’ outflows, he said.

“These eggs are generally laid up in the shallow water areas so a lot of wind and wave action can actually damage those eggs,” Fincel said.

Eggs will hatch when they’re covered with water and are left relatively undisturbed, he added.

Rainbow smelt are the dominant prey fish in lower Lake Oahe, but they’re not alone. The river over the past three years has seen an above-average production of other baitfish, such as yellow perch, white bass, freshwater drum, spottail shiners and emerald shiners.

And the GF&P is experimenting with a preliminary stocking of adult gizzard shad to provide another alternate food source for walleyes.

“This is the first we ever done this,” Fincel said. “We don’t know how this is going to take so we don’t want to rely on it or be too optimistic about it.”

Rhoades said the foundation is hoping for a turnout close to last year’s event, which had 330 people attend. She said a strong showing would be a great way for the community to show its support for the teachers.

“Having gone through some difficult times with budgets and the opt-out and everything, I think it’s really important at this time for the community to rally behind the teachers and show that we really do support our teachers, students and staff in the Yankton public school system,” Rhoades said. “So that is our goal — to maintain a positive drive and have a positive effect on the educational system in Yankton.”

Donations for the auctions from organizations, businesses and individuals are still being accepted. Items for the auctions currently include:

- a Sutton Bay golf package;
- USD and SDSU packages;
- Nebraska football game tickets;
- a Dakota Aerials print;
- baskets being made by teachers at different schools.

“There’s going to be something for everybody,” Rhoades said.

Tickets can be purchased by contacting Rhoades at 606-665-8981 or 605-660-2033, Roger Smith at Smith Insurance at 605-665-3611 or by stopping at Boller Printing at 308 Douglas Ave.

“We’re looking forward to a fun, relaxing evening and encourage the public to come and participate,” Rhoades said.

Wallace

1940s, he got his first opportunity to do one-on-one interviews, the format that was to be his life work and earn him 21 Emmys, five DuPont-Columbia journalism awards and five Peabody Awards.

He married college sweetheart Norma Kaphan, and they had two sons, Peter and Christopher. After divorcing in 1948, he wed Buff Cobb, an actress he met while interviewing her on WGN.

The couple moved to New York and CBS where they had an early 1950s radio and television talk show, “Mike and Buff.” The show ended in 1953, two years before the marriage did.

His next marriage, to artist Lorraine Perigord, lasted 28 years.

In 1986, he wed Yates, the widow of his longtime producer Ted Yates, who was killed in 1967 covering the war in the Middle East. She survives him, as do his son Chris, stepdaughter Pauline Dora, stepsons Eames and Angus Yates, seven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Wallace started doing commercials in the mid-1950s, which later caused news executives to question his credibility as an objective reporter. One of his first contracts was to promote Procter & Gamble’s Golden Fluffo shortening.

He covered the 1960 presidential race for Westinghouse and did an around-the-world interview series that introduced him to Vietnam.

Later, Wallace helped found “60 Minutes,” the show that would be his enduring showcase.

The “60 Minutes” clock first ticked on nationwide television Sept. 24, 1968, hosted by Harry Reasoner and Wallace.

The hosts were “the perfect fit — the guy you love and the guy you love to hate,” Hewitt told the Times in 2006.

By its third season, the show had moved to Sunday evenings, where it — and Wallace — stayed. By 1978, “60 Minutes” ranked among the top 10 programs in the country, a position it held for 23 seasons.

Other “60 Minutes” correspondents made names for themselves — including Dan Rather, Morley Safer, Ed Bradley and Diane Sawyer — but Wallace remained “the heart and soul” of the broadcast, Bradley said in the 2006 “60 Minutes” tribute. He also became the first CBS correspondent to work beyond 65.

Thanks!

Thank you for all the cards, phone calls, visits, and gifts I received celebrating my 85th birthday. This made my day more special. Thanks again, and God bless you.
