“We want to share memories about her life during the walk,” Beaudette said. “The aftermath of the shooting is something we endure every day, and the grief is still overwhelming.”

She added that the walk serves as healing process for Knoll's family and friends.

“Not only that, it will serve as a chance for people to stand united as a community and raise awareness about domestic violence,” Becker said. “The walk has become a unifying event, which enables family, friends and other victims to share their struggles and experiences together. We feel that there is an unfortunate reality that at some point, everybody knows — or will know — a victim of domestic violence.”

the tragic shootings last December at Connecticut's Sandy Hook Elementary School. In January, the congresswoman and Kelly announced the formation of a political action committee aimed at preventing gun violence.

“Gabby and I and our organization have been very involved,” Kelly said. “I was on the phone just yesterday with a couple of different senators about this very issue, and our organization is actively involved every single day. I'm expecting a call from another U.S. senator today to talk about this.”

As Kelly spoke Wednesday afternoon, the Washington Post reported the agreement forged by Sens. Joe Manchin III (D-W.V.) and Patrick J. Toomey (R-Pa.) would be more stringent than current law, which requires checks only when purchases are made through a licensed dealer, but less strict than the requirements originally sought by President Obama and congressional Democrats, who were seeking to expand background checks to nearly every kind of sale.

In a statement Wednesday afternoon, Obama welcomed the two lawmakers' agreement, saying that “common-sense background checks” would make it “harder for dangerous people to get their hands on a gun.”

“We have a compromise between Senate Democrats and Republicans, both who are strongly supported by the NRA and have high NRA ratings,” Kelly said. “Those are two individuals who, like my wife and I, believe there are some really common sense things we can do to make it much more difficult for criminals and the mentally ill to get access to firearms.”

He noted that bipartisan support does exist in Washington to strengthen background check provisions.

“I think it's a great step forward. It's progress. It might not be the exact solution that maybe I would have preferred, but it looks like it is going to be a good, solid bill,” Kelly said. “One of the best things about it is it comes from compromise.”

He described his wife as a “moderate Democrat” during her service in the U.S. House, who was often ranked “in the middle” rather than the most liberal or the most conservative member of Congress. “It's great to see that both sides of the aisle can compromise to do something that will make it more difficult for criminals and the dangerously mentally ill to get a gun,” he said.

Kelly is known not only as Giffords' husband, but also as a NASA astronaut who flew his first of four missions in 2001 aboard Space Shuttle Endeavour, the same space shuttle that he commanded on its final flight in May 2011.

He has also commanded Space Shuttle Discovery and is one of only two individuals who have visited the International attempted to shoot his girlfriend. Thankfully, this time it didn't turn out horrible like it did with Brianna,” Becker said. “This community needs education and awareness on domestic violence. It's incredibly important that this event is happening.”

Beaudette said that she hopes the walk allows community members to know of the resources available for domestic violence — including the Women's and Children's Shelter.

She added that the turnout was remarkable last year, and hopes it grows even more this year.

“This year, we had more time to put together the walk,” Beaudette said. “We've also been advertising it more this year, and a lot of news sources have been covering it. We hope that people show up and support the cause, and be informed and aware that domestic violence is going on and is an issue.”

The walk will also offer support to those who have been victims of domestic violence, and also commemorate and honor Knoll's life.

“We want to share memories about her life during the walk,” Becker said. “The aftermath of the shooting is something we endure every day, and the grief is still overwhelming.”

She added that the walk serves as healing process for Knoll's family and friends.

“Not only that, it will serve as a chance for people to stand united as a community and raise awareness about domestic violence,” Becker said. “The walk has become a unifying event, which enables family, friends and other victims to share their struggles and experiences together. We feel that there is an unfortunate reality that at some point, everybody knows — or will know — a victim of domestic violence.”

Space Station on four different occasions.

Kelly said, in a response to a question during the press conference, that he has achieved notoriety as an astronaut, as the spouse of a member of Congress who was nearly killed by a gunman, and today as an advocate for stricter gun measures.

“I don't really think about it in those terms,” Kelly said. “I'm just trying to do the right thing. When 20 first graders are murdered in their classrooms, I think if anybody feels they can do something to prevent, or at least to reduce the likelihood of that happening again, I think it's people's responsibility to do that.”

Kelly is a retired U.S. Navy Captain, best selling-author, prostate cancer survivor, and an experienced naval aviator who flew combat missions during the Gulf War.

“A well-trained, armed security guard is not the worst idea,” he said, when asked to respond to the recently approved school sentinel bill that was passed by the South Dakota Legislature. The bill, signed into law by Gov. Dennis Daugaard, allows school boards to decide whether teachers may be armed in classrooms.

“What is often the case in these mass shootings that we see in schools is that these things happen very fast,” Kelly said.

A well-trained security guard may be able to do something, under the right circumstances, he said.

“I don't think it goes a very long way towards addressing the main problem which is that we have given criminals and the dangerously mentally ill easy access to firearms.

“This is a complicated issue,” Kelly added. “Why is it in this country that we have 15 to 20 times the murder rate of similar countries? It's not just one thing, so I think there are a lot of things we can do.”

A well-trained security guard may play an important role in certain places in society, he said.

“What do you do when the students go on a trip to a museum? What do you do at the soccer game down the street? Do we really want to have to put an armed security guard in every place where people meet, whether it's a mall or a church or a sporting event?” he asked. “We have a serious problem, but there are ways it can be addressed.”

Kelly again cited a confidence in Congress to ultimately “do the right thing,” even when only about a week ago, it appeared any gun control measure would wither in the U.S. Senate.

“There's what you see in the media, and then, when you're involved with these negotiations, there's what really is happening,” he said. “We know what's going on behind the scenes, and, if you've seen my comments over the last couple weeks, I've been very optimistic.

“I've really felt that we're going to get something done, because members of Congress feel it is the right thing to do,” Kelly said. “In regard to background checks, it's something that 90 percent of Americans support. And, nearly 80 percent of the citizens of South Dakota support this type of legislation.”
