Ford

Ford that he was used to." Helgeland, who won a screenwriting Academy Award for "L.A. Confidential," had the blessing of Robinson's widow, Rachel. He felt "an enormous amount of pressure" to her husband's story, he told The Associated Press, both because of Robinson's significance and because his life had been written about so extensively.

"It's always a tricky thing because it's a movie, and even in this movie we're trying to tell two years in two hours," he said. "You're obviously not seeing every moment, but the discipline I applied to the script was trying to make sure every moment was documented."

While Ford is a major star, he essentially became part of an ensemble. Ford and Boseman had similar challenges: find the real people beneath the iconic images.

'You're playing a man we all expect to be an icon," Boseman told the Los Angeles Times recently. "But you can't do it that way. He didn't know he was larger than life. He was just moment-tomoment living with this. When Branch Rickey comes to him and says, 'I have a job for you,' Jackie Robinson's response is not 'Oh, my God, I am the One.' He's just thinking about how he's going to be able to play and not react to what they'll throw at him."

Ford said he read extensively about Rickey as he prepared for the role.

"First of all, I wanted to know my character as well as I could," Ford said. "I wanted to know what he looked like, what he moved like, how he spoke. There was quite a bit written about Branch Rickey. ... You don't play an icon. You play the real guy.

"He grew up in rural Ohio, and I know what his early history was. I know he was a deeply religious guy, that he was a schoolteacher at 17, that he was a lay preacher. He never went to games on Sunday. You know, that's what you play."

The film, which opens across the nation on Friday, depicts Rickey's motivation to break the color line in baseball as a mix of moral and commercial instincts.

"You know, you play a guy that is a businessman and his business is baseball," Ford said. "He wants the best team that he can get. He wants access to the pool of talent that's in the Negro Leagues, and he's got the authority of the board of directors to go ahead. And he needs a partner. He finds a partner in Jackie Robinson.'

One thing Kendrick likes about "42" is its depiction of how the game is played.

"Baseball movies are not easy to do to be convincing," he said. "The baseball playing I think is very convincing.

Kendrick said the film offers a romanticized view of the past in certain respects. But he said that's consistent with the game it-

"You think about baseball, and it's probably the most romanticized sport of them all," he said. 'So baseball films can bring that romantic nature out. They are so very romantic in nature because that's what baseball is all about. Whoever you grew up loving as a child will always be your favorite baseball player. For me, it's Hank Aaron. The really great baseball movies seem to capture that."

BACK TO THE FUTURE. AND THE PAST

Harrison Ford, 70, is supposedly returning to two of the most commercially successful franchises in film history. But in a recent interview, he shed little light on his involvement.

Asked if he could say anything about the possibility of reprising Han Solo in "Star Wars: Episode VII," arriving in 2015, Ford answered in one word: "No."

And what about the reported "Indiana Jones 5"? "I don't know. I'm not so good at predictions but it would be something I would be ambitious to do if the script were right. And the circumstances."

Funicello's Long Career Was Based On Likability

BY RICH HELDENFELS

© 2013, Akron Beacon Journal

Annette Funicello will not be remembered as a great actress, though she starred on TV and in movies, or a great singer, though she had hit records. Even the physical development that made her stand out from Walt Disney's other Mouseketeers was not the most important aspect of Funicello, who died Monday at the age of 70. Rather, she was noteworthy for an openness and likability matched by her obvious dignity, self-respect and respect for others. (She always referred to Walt Disney, who nurtured her career, as "Mr. Disney.") She was always a nice girl, then woman. She could sell Skippy peanut butter by the freight-car-load because people trusted her. She could stroll through the skin-and-silliness of the '60s beach movies because she maintained her own modesty throughout.

For generations used to the excess and failings of other young stars, Funicello may seem mysterious, someone without an excess of either self-esteem or ambition.

She was always there for carpools, Hot Dog Day and the PTA," her daughter Gina Gilardi said in 1994, according to People.com. (Funicello also had two sons from her marriage to agent Jack Gilardi.) "She was a nor-

As her friend Shelley Fabares said in a televised interview last year, "Her inherent sweetness and goodness and kindness just got through the screen.'

Some 15 years after her battle with multiple sclerosis led to her retiring almost completely from public life, Funicello remains a vivid memory for people who discovered her as part of the cast of the original "Mickey Mouse Club" beginning in 1955, just before Funicello turned 13.

While the cast included a couple of dozen regulars, with many coming and going until that run ended in 1959, the Utica, N.Y., native was a prominent presence from the beginning. She was featured in various serials in the program and had her own, called "Annette." She also attracted the attention of boys and young men — "the nation's prepu-bescent heartthrob," as Disney biographer Neal Gabler called her — because she was noticeably more built than the other performers on the show. (Years later, when "Saturday

Annette Funicello, the dark-haired darling of TV's "The Mickey Mouse Club" in the 1950s who further cemented her status as a pop-culture icon in the '60s by teaming with Frankie Avalon in a popular series of "beach" movies, died Monday at age 70. Funicello, who was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 1987 and became a spokeswoman for treatment of the chronic, often-debilitating disease of the central nervous system, died at Mercy Southwest Hospital in Bakersfield, Calif., Walt Disney Co. spokesman Howard Green said.
