Nebraska Spring Walk To School Day April 17

LINCOLN, Neb. — Safe Routes Nebraska invites kids, parents, educators and community leaders to take a step toward healthy lifestyles by participating in Nebraska's sixth annual Spring Walk to School Day on Wednesday, April 17. Communities across Nebraska will be hosting Spring Walk to School Day events, including walkathons, walking school buses, health and wellness fairs, safety presentations and more. Though the event is just three weeks away, there's still time to register and organize an event, said Angela Barry, Safe Routes Nebraska program coordinator. "Walking and biking to school every morning is fun and it gets kids moving," Barry said. "But that's only one of the many benefits. In addition to daily exercise, kids who walk or bike to school show improved concentration and behavior in the classroom." Safe Routes Nebraska offers a variety of resources on its website, saferoutesne.com, to help parents, educators and community groups plan, organize and promote Walk to School Day events. Once organizers register their events, they'll have access to a toolkit of posters, printable brochures and ideas for promoting the event in the community. Barry encourages families to celebrate the day even if there are no formal Walk to School events nearby. "Make time to walk or bike to school, even if it's just for one day," Barry said. "You and your kids will have fun while celebrating the benefits of daily activity, and who knows — maybe it'll even spark a new healthy habit." For more information about organizing or promoting a Spring Walk to School Day event, contact Angela Barry, Safe Routes Nebraska program coordinator, at (402) 476-7331 or abarry@sinclairhill.com.

She May Rethink This Engagement

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Dear Tom and Ray:
I have an issue. OK, not so much an issue, more of an argument between me and my fiancée. I just bought a 2008 Dodge Caliber. My new toy has everything I love, including cruise control. I do a lot of highway traveling, and I love my cruise control. My fiancée says it's no good that I use cruise control all the time, and that it's bad for the engine or transmission. Is he right? Is using my cruise control too often bad for my car — will I break my cruise control if I use it too much? If so, why, and when should one use cruise control? Love you guys! — Sara

RAY: If you think of the engagement period as a sort of test drive, Sara, your fiancée just backed into a tree.

TOM: Yeah. He doesn't have half a leg to stand on here. Using the cruise control won't wear anything out. In fact, because it helps you maintain a constant speed, it actually prevents a certain amount of wear and tear that comes from accelerating and decelerating more frequently.

RAY: The engine and transmission couldn't care less whether the electronic inputs are coming from your right foot or the cruise control system. And neither should your fiancée. So, tell him if he doesn't offer more fact-based advice in the future, he's going to lose his male automotive-pontificating privileges for the duration of the marriage.

TOM: Plus, highway driving is exactly the time you DO want to use cruise control — when you're maintaining a constant speed for a long period of time, when traffic is thin and moving predictably, and when there are few unexpected obstacles that get in your way (like pedestrians, bicyclists, crossing traffic or aggressive squeegee guys).

RAY: The time you don't want to use cruise control is in dense traffic, or in stop-and-go traffic, where you could be expected to have to slow down or stop frequently or unexpectedly. But even that's a safety issue, not a wear-and-tear issue.

TOM: Right. In the old days, the cruise control used a separate cable that physically moved the throttle. So there were a few small parts that could wear out over time back then. But cars don't have throttle cables anymore. Everything's done electronically, through the computer. So there's nothing to wear out, Sara.

RAY: So, suggest that the future hubby concede defeat on this one. And if he tries to argue that he's still right because you're going to use up your lifetime allotment of electrons, run.
