DAILY DOSE

Daily opinions from the P&D Sports Staff on local and national high school, college and professional sports.

BY JAMES D. CIMBUREK

My Monday morning started better than most. I finished the therapy on my torn rotator cuff, then got a decent workout in before lunch with my wife. As I was sitting at lunch with her, I saw the news about Yankton native Matt Dewald, a young man who I had the pleasure of covering for most of my career, finishing 20th in the Boston Marathon.

Two hours later, just as I finished talking to Dewald, I got the news about the bombings near the finish line of the race. I knew Dewald was fine, having talked to him about 30 minutes after the first bombings, but I was still in a little bit of shock. Someone online had given the perspective that there were over 30 bombings in Iraq on Monday, but such things are (thankfully) not an every day occurrence in this country, so it still catches us off guard.

As I got through the rest of the day, helping the news department with their reaction piece while trying to put together my story on Dewald, I found myself trying to understand why someone would do this.

The answer did not come.

There can be no answer to explain the random taking of lives. There can be no answer to explain the random mutilation of over 100 individuals: children, fathers, mothers, friends. There can be no answer to explain destruction of lives.

That feeling of shock and disbelief is something I first felt on 9-11 and have felt a couple times since. It is something that I hope to never get used to feeling.

information and "it is vital they have all resources available for their investigation."

Fans arriving early for the Bruins' game were met by police who were in the area to secure the arena and a nearby federal building. One officer outside the players' parking lot was telling arriving spectators, "The game is canceled. We need you to exit the city safely and quickly."

Moments later, Bruins captain Zdeno Chara drove out of the lot, and not long after that the Senators' team bus left down a side ramp.

Police were searching all bags and people entering the train station below the Bruins' arena.

An electronic sign, which usually lists departure times, instead read: "We ask all passengers to be as vigilant as possible and alert authorities if anything suspicious."

The Red Sox game had been over for about an hour when the explosions could be heard at Fenway Park, about a mile from where the bombs went off at the finish line.

Major League Baseball called the bombings a "horrible occurrence" and said the league is monitoring the situation.

"The safety of everyone that comes to our ballparks is always our top priority and we will continue to do everything to ensure a safe environment for our fans," MLB spokesman Pat Courtney said.

President Barack Obama's news conference Monday evening was shown on the video board during batting practice before the Cincinnati Reds hosted the Philadelphia Phillies. There was a moment of silence for the Boston victims at that ballpark and at other major league stadiums with games Monday.
