Man Found Dead On Golf Course, Hypothermia Suspected

FERTILE, Minn. (AP) — Authorities believe exposure to the chilly weather killed a man whose naked body was found on a golf course near his home in northwestern Minnesota.

Polk County authorities were called to the Sandhill River Golf Course in Fertile about 4:10 p.m. Monday and found the body of 35-year-old Andrew Springer.

The sheriff's office says preliminary autopsy results show no signs of foul play and that Springer apparently died of hypothermia.

chairman of the Transportation and Telecommunications Committee. "I have to use those principles to make wise policy decisions — and this is a wise policy decision."

Sen. Paul Schumacher of Columbus chastised lawmakers for bickering over "minuscule" tax cuts and invoked the Eisenhower-era infrastructure projects that led to interstate highways, now a crucial part of the nation's economy.

"We know that to have a future, we need to invest in the present," he said.

Other senators questioned the measure's timing — introduced when gas prices have fallen — and argued the tax hits hardest the motorists who can least afford it.

Sen. Beau McCoy of Omaha said he would rather see the state divert an additional quarter-cent of its existing sales tax revenue into road projects. A similar bill was sponsored by then-state Sen. Deb Fischer of Valentine in 2011.

"I think this (fuel tax increase) has the potential to really affect Nebraska in a way that's not helpful," McCoy said.

Smith said that approach wouldn't generate enough revenue to meet the state's needs.

Sen. Bill Kintner, also of Papillion, said he viewed the "user fee" approach as the best way to pay for roads and bridges, but opposed it because senators haven't passed tax cuts to offset the proposed increase.

Nebraska's gas was the 26th most expensive nationally because of its taxes and fees as of Jan. 1, according to the American Petroleum Institute. Earlier this month, the state's gas tax fell behind Iowa's for the first time in decades after a new 32-cent gas tax went into effect there.

Gov. Pete Ricketts opposes the increase. In his weekly newspaper column last week, the Republican governor said he's conducting a national search for a new roads director who can take a "fresh look" at how the state's roads are funded. Ricketts suggested looking at public-private partnerships and changing regulations to provide more flexibility.

"While proponents of the gas tax increase have raised important concerns about the state of Nebraska's roads and bridges, there are alternatives our state should first explore," Ricketts said. "Raising taxes should never be the first line of defense."

Smith said he's confident the new director will find efficiencies in the department, but cities and counties also have a large need.

Pipeline

to avoid reservation lands.

The pipeline would carry tar-sands oil from Alberta through Montana, South Dakota and Nebraska before connecting with an existing network.

President Barack Obama has refused to grant the federal permit necessary for the pipeline to pierce the Canada-U.S. border.

The various lawyers in the proceeding over the South Dakota permit are preparing for a May 5-8 evidentiary hearing before the state commission.

South Dakota law requires that a company needs to certify the permit conditions will still be met if construction hasn't commenced within four years.

That is the process now under way for TransCanada. The various sides have been engaged in discovery of evidence from each other.

Rosebud Sioux lawyer Matthew Rappold said his request for access to TransCanada safety records was filed Feb. 20. TransCanada produced 34 documents on the afternoon of Monday, March 30.

"Three days before our testimony is due," Rappold said.

He asked the commission how he could be expected under those circumstances to prepare testimony that is due Thursday, April 2.

Commissioners Chris Nelson and Gary Hanson didn't hide their opinions the Rosebud Sioux had been put at a disadvantage.

"I think this is a very unique position for Rosebud," Hanson said. "I personally believe you need to have additional time."

William Taylor, a lawyer representing TransCanada, asked that the schedule changes apply only to the Rosebud Sioux.

"If you want to give Mr. Rappold some extra days, that doesn't bother me. If you want to give everybody some extra days, that really troubles me," Taylor said.

The three commissioners agreed. Only the Rosebud Sioux tribal government presented evidence it was directly impeded by TransCanada.

"We want to be completely fair to all the parties and make sure everyone has the same opportunities here," Hanson said.

The commissioners spent three full hours, plus 20 minutes of breaks, hearing arguments on scheduling matters Tuesday.

They voted 3-0 to reject a request from the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe to push the evidentiary hearing back two months to mid-July.

PUC staff attorney Kristen Edwards said the staff subpoenaed five witnesses for the May 5-8 hearing.

TransCanada's Taylor said lawyers for various tribes and organizations were slow or weren't cooperative, with the exception of Rappold for the Rosebud Sioux.

Commissioner Kristie Fiegen said the panel wanted to be inclusive and purposely allowed many interveners.

Fiegen recalled that the commission's chief attorney, John Smith, attempted on Nov. 13 to work out a schedule with all sides but a decision couldn't be reached.

She said PUC staff wanted the hearing in March, some participants sought April and commissioner Nelson settled the question when he proposed May.

"There was time built in. Everybody knew this was going to be a schedule that moved along very quickly," Nelson said Tuesday.
