Guard career with the Wagner unit, and he becomes the first SDANG warrant officer to receive the award, according to a news release.

The U.S. Army honors one warrant officer and six officers annually with the MacArthur Award. They come from the active Army, National Guard and Army Reserve.

The honorees demonstrate the ideals for which MacArthur stood — duty, honor and country. Each soldier receives an engraved 15-pound bronze bust of MacArthur mounted on a walnut pedestal.

As of last year, only 677 recipients had received the MacArthur award in its 27-year history out of thousands and thousands of officers, warrant officers, lieutenants and captains.

To be chosen among so many great warrant officers and to receive this award is a humbling experience, Podzimek said.

"When I found out that one warrant officer in the entire National Guard would be selected, I figured my chance of winning this award were slim to none," he said. "When I read the list of award winners and saw my name ... I had to read it about three to four more times. I couldn't believe it."

SHOWING LEADERSHIP

One example of Podzimek's effective leadership style was demonstrated when the 155th suffered the loss of a soldier, said Lt. Col. David Dailey, 153rd Engineer Battalion commander who recommended Podzimek for the MacArthur Award.

"He led from the front, took the time to talk to his soldiers individually and mentored them through a very difficult time," Dailey said in a statement. "He has been an instrumental leader, using his abilities to mentor his subordinates to become a cohesive and resilient platoon."

Podzimek said his focus remained on his men and their ongoing needs in the midst of losing a fellow soldier. He looked at the soldiers as individuals, not strictly as a unit.

"I just let them know that they had somebody to talk to, if and when the time was there and they were ready," he said. "It's different for each person, and different people handle it differently. I may handle it differently than the next 100 people — good, bad or other."

Another unexpected situation — actually, two situations — challenged Podzimek's ability to lead in the face of an emergency.

In June 2014, South Dakota was hit at the same time with two natural disasters — a tornado which destroyed a large portion of Wessington Springs and flooding that devastated parts of the southeast corner of the state and impacted neighboring areas such as Yankton.

Podzimek's technical knowledge shone when he managed more than four construction projects and his team responded to the flood operations and the tornado clean-up, Dailey said.

"He always makes an extraordinary effort to ensure his company is able to accomplish any mission," Dailey said. "His dedication and integrity to the mission first, epitomizes the ideals for which this (MacArthur) award stands for."

Podzimek provided a much more modest account of his role in the two disaster operations. He emphasized he was completing an annual training (AT) project in Yankton at the time and didn't actually travel to Wessington Springs. He said he provided more of a back-up role in the two disaster responses.

"Last year, our annual training was done in Yankton at the Easton (archery) complex," he said. "We were constructing comfort stations between two Olympic ranges. The AT was on the downhill slope, and I was able to move our feet faster and help with different things (on the tornado and flooding responses)."

Memorial

past four years, our committee has given an update at the program. But this year, we're breaking ground for the monument on Memorial Day."

Allen credits tremendous public response for moving the monument far ahead of schedule. The committee is within $8,000 of the original $156,000 target.

"We're planning a number of fundraisers throughout the summer," she said. "We're confident that we can raise the rest of the money, so we're going to start work on the monument."

Allen pointed to a major development propelling the project's quantum leap toward completion. Three Springfield natives — Dick Martin and brothers Gene and Larry Lang — have pledged to match up to $30,000 in donations.

"That made all the difference in getting us to our deadline a whole lot faster," she said.

And speaking of deadlines, the faster completion of the memorial has also moved up the timeline for veterans and their families wishing to submit names for the monument. The memorial is open to any honorably discharged veteran with Springfield ties through the community, college and surrounding area.

"Right now, we have about 1,400 names. The deadline is now June 1, and we don't want to leave out anybody," Allen said. "We have the June 1 deadline because we have to get all the names to Luken (Memorials of Yankton) by July 1 for etching, and we need a month before then to vet the names and check the spellings."

The etching of the names is included in the project's current cost, Allen said. Names could be added at a later date but would carry a charge for the veteran or family. "We want to make sure we can get as many names as possible before the work starts," she said.

Martin, a West Point graduate, not only is matching financial donations but is also writing a biography on each veteran's military histories, where possible, Allen said. Martin works with information from the veterans, families and military records, she said.

"We have been publishing them as fast as Dick gets them finished and approved by the family," she said. "So far, there have been some pretty good ones from the Second World War and from the Korean War and Vietnam War. The families from the First World War veterans — there aren't too many of those still around."

The veterans' stories are amazing, but two immediately came to mind, Allen said.

"One of the guys was a tank commander in Patton's 3rd Army, and he was moving so fast that he found himself and all of his men behind enemy lines," she said. "He recruited local farmers to build haystacks and to hide the tanks under the haystacks."

Another veteran truly illustrated that it wasn't his time to go, Allen said. He was twice removed from submarines that later were lost at sea with all men on board.

"The third sub he was on, he was in a battle where they shot down or torpedoed a Japanese destroyer, and it turned the tide of the war," she said.

Allen remains confident the Springfield Veterans Memorial will raise the remaining funds. Even after meeting the $156,000 goal, the committee will continue raising funds for future maintenance needs.

"We've got to make sure the money is there for new flags and for the replacement of lighting," she said. "We're also putting in an irrigation system to help with the flower garden and landscaping. All of that will come from maintenance dollars."

Besides cash gifts, area residents have stepped forward with in-kind donations for fundraisers, Allen said. Recently, a local cattle producer donated a half-beef — 1,000 pounds of meat — while a locker owner donated the processing for a raffle.

"We've been able to do all of this ahead of schedule because of the generosity of the people. It's been amazing," she said. "We've also gotten support from the American Legion and the Legion Auxiliary (of Springfield), and we received grants from the South Dakota Community Foundation and Casey's."

The effort has taken four long years so far, but the sudden appearance of the finish line has spurred on the committee, veterans and other supporters, Allen said.

"We're passionate about this," she said. "We're pumped with the idea of getting to break ground and to give (the veterans) the recognition they deserve. It's been an amazing accomplishment."
