Library Celebrates National Poetry Month

April is National Poetry Month. To celebrate, the Yankton Community Library, 515 Walnut, invites you to share your writing talents with the staff.

If you would like to submit a poem to the library staff, we will gladly display your poetry during National Library Week, April 12-18. It's asked that all poems submitted have a library or book theme. The poems can be about your favorite book, your favorite character from a book, the act of reading or wherever else your imagination takes you with this theme.

Turn your poems in at the front desk in exchange for a treat. List only your first name on your writing so we can display the poems in the library. All ages are welcome to participate.

For more information, call the library at 668-5276.

Bright Start Parenting Spring Classes Set

Yankton County Parents as Teachers will be offering Bright Start Responsive Parenting classes this spring. Classes will be held on April 18 and 25 from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. at the Avera Pavilion Conference Room 1, located at 409 Summit St., Yankton.

Participants should attend both sessions in order to receive a certificate.

This class is designed for parents with children from birth to age three.

Key topics being discussed will include: "The Parent and Child Dance," "Your Unique Child," "Responding to Your Child's Needs," "What and How my Child Learns," "Parenting is Stressful and So is Growing Up" and "Encouraging Your Child."

The classes are free and pre-registration is required as class size is limited. To register, call Yankton County Parents as Teachers at 605-661-4833.

Parents as Teachers are a home visitation program that provides information, support and encouragement to families through home visits and classes in order to promote child development during the first three years of life.

NPS Is Looking for Feedback

Vermillion Plain Talk

VERMILLION — The Missouri River Institute held its annual research symposium at the Al Neuharth Media Center on The University of South Dakota campus Thursday.

The symposium allows the institute to present research education and outreach about the river.

"We've got talks today about research in terms of endangered species, hydrology, aquatic and terrestrial communities, ecological communities, human dimensions of management impacts, things like that," said David Swanson, USD biology professor and director at the Missouri River Institute.

The goal of these presentations was to help make the river more accessible to the public. The speakers included graduate students from USD and South Dakota State University as well as Nebraska Game and Parks and other government agencies.

"Some (projects) are really long-term monitoring projects, so there's anything from some research studies that take a year or two to some that have been ongoing to 30 years and so it's a wide variety of different kinds of length of studies and different types of make these parks more accessible and enjoyable.

"We are working on our draft plan and we are interested in whatever the public would like to see or what they would like to do at all of these different properties whether they'd like more camping, whether they'd like to hike, whether they'd like increased river access, those are all things that we are really interested in," Yager said.

The National Park Service owns three properties along the Missouri River National Corridor, Bow Creek Recreation Area near Wynot, Nebraska, the Mulberry Bend Scenic Overlook in Vermillion and Green Island near Yankton.

"The formal public comment period won't reopen until later this summer or fall but we are always interested in hearing the public's comments or suggestions," Yager said. "We'd like these properties to be the best for the river but also be great for the public to use and to enjoy."

Those interested in commenting can contact the office directly or visit the website www.nps.gov/mnrr.

"We are looking to do a property management plan and, in that property management plan, we would like to figure out our management activities whether that be development or restoration for the next five to 10 years."

studies," Swanson said.

Lisa Yager of the National Park Service was there to discuss the national parks along the Missouri River National Corridor and the future plans for those areas.

"We are looking to do a property management plan and, in that property management plan, we would like to figure out our management activities whether that be development or restoration for the next five to 10 years," Yager said.
