ending June 30 this year for labor, mileage, equipment and supplies were $522,000, said Keith Fisk, administrator of the wildlife damage program in the GF&P. By comparison, the department spent more than $1 million on deer depredation problems last winter, although Fisk said conditions were more severe than usual and forced deer to eat hay and feed meant for livestock. New to the goose management plan this year is what's called a "management take" that allows hunters in 15 eastern counties to shoot eight Canada geese daily Aug. 14-29. The state is already using the maximum 107 hunting days allowed under the Migratory Bird ing commemorative souvenir cups that can be used to purchase alcohol at any of the downtown establishments rather than selling it themselves. According to Rust, Rockin' Ribfest is an end-of-summer community event for Yankton. "We want to offer something for everyone," she said. "It is one event that is held in town that is specifically held for the community. It is a classic rock concert, a rib lovers paradise and a great one-day family event for everyone in Yankton." The line up of bands this year includes: Rust from 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m.; The Mitigators from 1:15-2:45 p.m.; Mrs. Begley and the Boys from 3-4:45 p.m.; The Austin Buescher Band from 5-6:45 p.m.; Go Figure from 7-8:45 p.m.; and, Quazy from 9-11 p.m. To make a donation or volunteer to help at the event visit <http://www.historicdowntownyankton.com/events/ribfest/>.

Treaty Act, which doesn't allow hunting before Sept. 1, said Vaa. States are allowed to reduce a too-large resident goose population with an August season that doesn't count against the 107-day limit. The August season and another that covers most of the state beginning Sept. 4 both have daily bag limits of eight and target resident Canada geese. The daily bag limit drops to three on Oct. 1 when migrating geese begin passing through the state. Keeping geese out of fields can involve supplemental feeding sites, vegetation barriers, hazing and placing fences during the summer molting period when geese lose wing feathers and can't fly. The state also has a permit from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service allowing annual depredation kills of up to 1,500 geese and the destruction of 1,000 nests. There have been fewer than 100 depredation kills each year, but there was a shift this year to destroying nests, which average a half-dozen eggs. The GF&P destroyed 348 nests and 1,836 eggs last year. This year it was 937 nests and 5,395 eggs. Much of the nest destruction was in northeast South Dakota and in places like Day County where the GF&P spent $134,011 on depredation and control efforts a year ago. "In some of those areas that historically have seen a significant amount of depredation we did nest work and this year there was almost no damage to landowners or it was very reduced, and there wasn't a lot of staff time involved there anymore," Fisk said. "We might have put up a couple miles of fences on wetlands, but since we did that nest work it really eased the workload in some areas."
