S.D. Receives Grant To Review Health Rates

PIERRE — South Dakota has received a grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to assist the state in reviewing health insurance rates and improving consumer access to rate information, Gov. Mike Rounds has announced.

The $1 million grant is designed for use over a three-year period, but the state has no intention of using the full amount, the governor said.

"We applied for $585,198 in grant money, and that is all we plan to spend," Rounds said. "I am not interested in wasting federal funds just because those funds are available."

The South Dakota Division of Insurance already carefully reviews health insurance rate filings, but the federal grant will be used to contract for actuarial services that will provide more comprehensive reviews of rate-increase requests, the governor said.

The grant will also be used to develop a website where consumers can find information about health insurance rates that have been reviewed by the state Division of Insurance.

"South Dakotans will benefit from this federal grant because it provides for enhanced protection against unjustified rate increases and also improves access to health insurance rate information," Rounds said.
