Dow

The Dow swung more than 600 points in the one hour and 45 minutes after the Fed's statement.

The stomach-churning highs and lows are reminiscent of the fall of 2008, the depths of the financial crisis, when there were swings of 800 or even 1,000 points in day.

Computerized trading systems — programmed to analyze charts, capitalize on the tiniest changes in price and execute trades with no human intervention — are making the market rougher.

High-frequency trading programs make up about half of the trading volume in a normal market day but 70 percent or more on a volatile one. The programs pounce on stock changes to make just slivers of a penny but do it so often that it adds up.

Other investors also use charts and market indicators to make trades based on market momentum. The bet is that if the market is rising, it will keep rising, and if it's falling, it will keep falling.

More investors are turning to this strategy because the sudden slowdown in the economy has left them unable to judge companies based on their fundamentals, like projected profits. The more people use a momentum strategy, the faster the indexes rise or fall.

Ex-Executive Charged In N.Y. With Insider Trading

NEW YORK (AP) — A California man who worked for a semiconductor company was arrested on insider trading charges Wednesday in a probe of expert networking firms that help funnel inside information to hedge funds.

Stanley Ng was arrested at his home in Cupertino, Calif. He was charged with one count of conspiracy to commit securities fraud and wire fraud.

Authorities say Ng worked since 2002 at Santa Clara, Calif.-based Marvell Technology Group Ltd. as its manager responsible for ensuring federal securities laws were followed. They said he reported information to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Ng and his co-conspirators, Preet Bharara said, "traded inside information as casually as some people trade baseball cards."

Marvell was not accused of any crime. A message left with Ng's lawyer on Wednesday was not immediately returned.

Ng was accused in court papers of providing inside information to Winifred Jiau, who was convicted in June of conspiracy to commit securities fraud and wire fraud. Her trial was one of the first to result from a government crackdown of Wall Street middlemen suspected of peddling inside information as if it were legitimate research.

Jiau, of Fremont, Calif., was among 13 people arrested last year on charges that she conspired to accept cash and gifts to feed inside information to hedge funds. Most of the other defendants have pleaded guilty. Jiau is awaiting sentencing.

Jiau worked for two years as a consultant for Primary Global Research, a Mountain View, Calif.-based company.

A criminal complaint filed in federal court in Manhattan said Ng was recruited to join an "investment club" with Jiau and agreed to provide inside information regarding Marvell. Authorities said Ng provided detailed, secret information about Marvell's financial results in May and August 2008.

The S&P 500 finished the day down 4.4 percent and the Nasdaq composite index down 4.1 percent.

Financial stocks led the market lower. Bank of America and Citigroup each lost more than 10 percent of their market value. Wall Street is worried because it doesn't know how badly American banks might be hurt by Europe's debt problems.

Investors fear Italy and Spain will be the next countries unable to repay their debts. The European financial system has been battered by fears about banks holding bonds of heavily indebted countries such as Greece and Portugal.

"It's the same game of Old Maid playing out in Europe that was played out here during the subprime mortgage crisis," said Quincy Krosby, an economist and market strategist with Prudential Financial.

The fear is that if European governments default on their bonds, it will hurt the European banks that own them. That could start a chain reaction that hurts the United States, because large U.S. banks have loans to European banks.

Europe is also a big market for U.S. companies. It accounted for about 29 percent of foreign sales for S&P 500 companies last year.

France came under pressure Wednesday amid concerns that it could become the next country to lose its top AAA rating. The cost of insuring against a default of French government debt hit a record, according to data from Markit.

In Asia, the concern is that higher inflation in China could lead to slower growth. China, Brazil and other less-developed countries have provided the strongest economic growth since the world began to recover from recession in 2009.

Gold rose above $1,800 per ounce for the first time as more money poured into investments considered safe at a volatile time for the financial markets. Gold closed up about $41 at $1,784. It first passed $1,600 only in late May.

The 10-year Treasury note, which has also served as a haven, also rose sharply. Its yield fell to 2.11 percent from 2.26 percent late Tuesday. It had reached a record low of 2.03 percent on Tuesday. A bond's yield falls when its price rises.

Investors have bought U.S. government debt even after S&P stripped the United States of its top credit rating, AAA, late last week.

Nearly three stocks fell for every one that rose on the New York Stock Exchange. Consolidated trading volume was heavier than usual, 8.3 billion shares. In July, average daily volume was less than half that. On Monday, it was 9.9 billion, the highest since September 2008.

Stocks have fallen so far that six companies have withdrawn plans this week to sell stock on U.S. markets for the first time, according to Dealogic. That brings the number of withdrawn initial public offerings, or IPOs, to 65 so far this year. That is the most through this point in the year since 2001.
