Briar Cliff To Host High School Students Aug. 6-10

SIoux CITY, Iowa — High school juniors and seniors who are looking for affordability, opportunity and academic rigor in their college experiences are invited to participate in Iowa Private College Week (IPCW) campus visits at Briar Cliff University, beginning Monday, Aug. 6, through Friday, Aug. 10.

Some 28 independent colleges and universities across Iowa will be expecting more than 5,000 student visitors during IPCW. At Briar Cliff, students and their families may choose from daily morning or afternoon sessions to explore their academic interests and find out what BCU has to offer. The Briar Cliff sessions will begin with registration at 8:45 a.m. and 1:15 p.m. in the Stark Student Center on campus at 3303 Rebecca Street in Sioux City.

"The Iowa Tuition Grant program provides $45 million in student aid to more than 14,000 Iowa students each year," said Gary Steinke, president of IAICU. "Our campuses add more than $300 million in institutional financial aid so that very competitive tuition packages are available. So many parents are surprised to find a private college education for their students is well within their reach," Steinke said.

Students visiting the Briar Cliff campus will meet with Briar Cliff professors who are well-known for their dedication to student success. They also will hear about campus life from students and meet with financial aid advisors to learn how Briar Cliff makes tuition affordable with scholarships, grants and other forms of support. Visitors also will tour BCU's dynamic hilltop campus.

Casey's General Stores will be offering gasoline discount coupons for participants of IPCW. The five-cent per gallon discount coupons will be provided to participants when they complete a campus tour. Additionally, students participating in three campus visits during IPCW and enroll at a member college of the Iowa Association of Independent Colleges and Universities will be entered in a drawing for a $500 bookstore voucher. Fifty-six winners will be chosen.

"During IPCW, I was able to visit two colleges in Sioux City," said BCU student Jonathan Duff of Carroll, Iowa. "My decision to attend Briar Cliff came down to the quality education, the professors and the good feeling I had when I was on campus. It felt like home."

For more information, call the Office of Admissions at 279-5200 or email admissions@briarcliff.edu. Register online at www.briarcliff.edu.

Fires

The biggest challenge we faced with these fires was communication," he said. "Everyone that was there had different radio frequencies."

Kumm added that every county throughout Nebraska has multiple radio channels, and it is "nearly impossible" to program a radio to store 100 or more channels.

Because the expensive radios were largely useless, crews had to find other ways to communicate with each other.

"The only way we could communicate was through texting," he said. "There was poor cell coverage there, so we would have to talk to people face to face (to get their phone numbers) and then text them to communicate."

One of the main risks going forward for the region is more lightning fires, which is how the fires in Nebraska were started. All told, more than 70,000 acres of land were burned in the fires, with about $2.5 million in total damage — most of which went to fire personnel salaries and for equipment and supplies crews used. Most of the expenses went to battle the Fairfield Creek fire, which was the largest of the fires in the area.

Most of the damage to the area included pastures being destroyed, hay bales burning, trees and timber burned, and damage to about a dozen homes.

"The last job we had before we came back was defending one of the homes in the area," Kumm said. "All the crews were able to save a lot of homes from burning."

When Kumm's team arrived in the area, they were quickly reminded of how dangerous the fires were.

Kumm said the fires got out into the trees, so firefighters could not simply move in and put the fires out.

"You can't just drive in to those fires or get to them," he said. "You really just have to wait for the fire to get out of the trees."

He added that his crew was not used to the pine trees they were up against, as cedar trees are much more common for the Bloomfield Fire Department to deal with.

Crews also used back burning as a way of reducing the amount of flammable material available to the bushfires. This is the controlled burning of the bush, or material that can be easily set ablaze. It also helps prevent future bushfires.

Kumm said that he is worried about the potential for similar fires to break out along the lake area in northern Knox County. He said that it would be "very dangerous" to have those fires in areas where there are a lot of trees.

However, he added that prevention is the main key in stopping future fires from breaking out. Kumm said that burn bans in place in the area, including Knox County, could help stop fires from sparking.

Penalties for those who break the burn ban in Knox County include a $100 fine, along with any costs to the fire department to put out the fire, and also being criminally liable if you start a fire that leads to someone's house burning down.

"Despite measures in place, we can't stop all the accidents and all the lightning from occurring," Kumm said.
