Ullrich Trust Donates To Center

COURTESY PHOTO

Otto Ullrich Memorial Trust administrators Dick Kulbel and Duane Frick presented Christy Hauer, executive director of The Center, with a check for $9581.98. The funds will purchase a NuStep cross trainer, Sensaphone system for the walk-in cooler and freezer units, a multi-media projector and the installation of an interior handicap accessible door. Over the years, the trust has generously funded more than $40,000 in projects at The Center.

- The Trondhiem Lutheran parish near Irene will be host to the 19th annual convention of the Yankton Circuit Young Peoples' Luther League and Choral Union which will be in session from September 2 to 4 inclusive.

• According to announcement made this morning by Harry Coates, commissioner of fire and police and officers and dance committee of Ernest Bowyer Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the post will put on a dance September 15, the first organization to sponsor the financing necessary for the purchase of a two-way police radio with which it is planned to equip Yankton police cars and motor cycles and the county sheriff's cars.

- Green is the color associated with freshmen as they begin their college careers. Green also is the color of money it takes to finance that education, and it seems to take more every year. Even the most well-padded wallet wilts considerably by the time it has run the gamut of tuition, dormitory, board, science, library, gym, general, health and other fees.

• Some 250 members of the National Farmers Organization converged on the Farmers Dairy and Produce Cooperative in Freeman Thursday to demand signing of a master contract by the cooperative guaranteeing a stipulated price for dairy products.

- Mary Ellen Gannon, director of the Contact Center, which sponsors the Yankton Women's Center and Shelter, accepted a check from Larry Hosmer, exalted ruler of the Yankton's B.P.O.E. No. 994 Elks. The Elks was a major contributor in a fund drive to pay off the shelter's mortgage, contributing $2,000. Also donating $2,000 was the Vivian Harvey Auld Memorial Fund and an anonymous contributor. The Salvation Army donated $1,000, and Larry and Carol Engel donated $500. Many others donated to the fund drive, which exceeded the $11,000 goal.

• Lawn care businesses and installers of underground watering systems agreed that this summer's heat increased their work loads. Bill Fejfar, owner of Fejfar Plumbing and Heating, said his business installed more than 35 systems this summer, and expected to install 40 by summer's end. That compared to a total of 20 systems installed last summer.

How Much Protection Does Crop Insurance Guarantee?

BROOKINGS — At some point, we knew that large inversion between old crop and new crop prices would converge, and that it would likely be a relatively fast change. However, the suddenness and speed with which that occurred over the last couple weeks was still shocking, said Darrell R. Mark, Adjunct Professor of Economics at South Dakota State University.

"Old crop September corn futures have dropped $1.34 per bushel since late June and basis fell from $0.80 to $1.25 per bushel across the country," he said. "Similarly, old crop August soybean futures have fallen $1.86 per bushel since their recent high July 22 and basis decreased by around $1.30 per bushel."

Mark said both new crop corn and soybean futures have fallen over $1 per bushel, although new crop basis bids have remained relatively steady.

"These large price drops leave corn and soybean growers — particularly those that had made few pre-harvest sales yet — worried about how to market their crops now and manage their risk exposure," he said.

In light of new crop corn and soybean bids around $4.20 per bushel and $11.20 per bushel in eastern South Dakota, Mark said the guaranteed insurance prices for Revenue Protection (RP) policies look quite good now.

"The spring price for corn was $5.65 per bushel and the spring price for soybeans was $12.87 per bushel, while those prices are about $1.50 per bushel higher than current cash bids for new crop grain, it is important to remember that these prices are not guaranteed for every bushel produced on the farm — due to deductibles and actual production," he said.

For an example of the actual floor price established with an RP insurance policy, visit iGrow.org and search for Aug. 5 Cattle Corn Comments.

"Marketing plans are not complete just because the crop is covered with RP insurance," Mark said. "RP crop insurance is, for many producers, an excellent part of a risk management plan. The RP policy that includes the harvest price option provides protection for producers forward contracting their bushels prior to harvest. Producers that took advantage of new crop forward contracts and priced a portion of their insured yields may have locked in a price around $1 per bushel higher than is currently available."

For pre-harvest sales not yet made and post-harvest marketing plans, Mark said few attractive alternatives exist for producers at this time.

"The current cash bid prices are likely near breakeven levels of production for some producers — particularly those who have aggressively bid up cash rent on farmland," he said.

Mark said a necessary first step is to calculate breakeven cost of production (in dollars per bushel) to gain perspective on whether current prices are profitable or not.

"Many producers may find that their yield prospects have improved from what they had budgeted at planting time; thus, the additional bushels would lower breakeven cost of production per bushel," he said. "As far as making additional sales, producers probably don't need to chase prices lower at this time. Instead, waiting for a potential pre-harvest rally and making an incremental sale should that occur would be prudent; otherwise, consider waiting until after harvest lows are established."

While the last couple of years have offered little incentive to store grain due to a flat or inverse carrying charge in the futures market, there is likely to be more opportunity to profit from storing the 2013 corn crop, and perhaps the soybean crop.

For corn, there is approximately a $0.28 per bushel carry between July 2014 and December 2013 corn futures. Mark said storing grain for eight months would provide a $0.035 per bushel return to storage.

"Even though that isn't likely to cover all costs of storage, an increase in the July/December spread could make this more attractive by harvest time," Mark said. "There is only a $0.22 per bushel spread between July 2014 and November 2013 soybean futures, so storage hedges are currently less attractive for soybeans for this length of time."

Mark added that producers should evaluate possible storage options for corn and soybeans, with intentions to update plans at harvest time.

"It is likely that many producers will place grain into storage this fall and will not begin to sell it in the cash market until 2014 to avoid additional grain sales in 2013, especially those who deferred 2012 crop insurance indemnity payments into 2013," he said. "Should that occur, basis improvement and a modest post-harvest rally could occur in November or December that would offer a more attractive sales opportunity at that time."
