Rally Events Span Far Beyond Sturgis

ROCHFORD (AP) — The small Black Hills hamlet known as Rochford is 20 miles from Sturgis and has a full-time population of less than 15 people.

Still, when the annual cycle rally arrives, Rochford begins to rumble.

Like other Western South Dakota cities, this tiny town has become known as a place for bikers to play well away from the big crowds and traffic in Sturgis proper.

Each year, the revelry from the rally reverberates far from Sturgis and into places like Rochford, tucked well into the Northern Hills. Other mini-rallies will pop up this week in Custer, Rapid City, Deadwood, Hill City and Hulett, Wyoming.

But Rochford has one thing those places don't: the Moonshine Gulch Saloon.

The Moonshine Gulch had already attracted more than 100 bikers and other patrons on Saturday afternoon, two full days before the official start of the rally.

Over the years, the rally has drawn people from all across the world to Rochford, said Mike Kohl, who traveled about 800 miles from Appleton, Wisconsin, to help saloon owner Betsy Harn cook food on the grill.

"I've seen people come here from Australia, Germany, Canada — you name it," said Kohl, who has come to Rochford during the rally for the past eight years.

Russ Kerstetter, of Kansas City, has been to the Sturgis rally 15 times and attended the annual party in Rochford the past eight.

This year, he came to Rochford on a 2003 Harley-Davidson Fat Boy, arriving with 15 friends to hang out in the small town because he prefers places that aren't on every tourist's itinerary.

"I like the little hole-in-the-wall places that are off the beaten path," he told the Rapid City Journal. "Small bars in small towns have got more character."

He said it's more fun to be at a place like the Moonshine Gulch Saloon than some modern, cookie-cutter bar with no soul.

The Moonshine Gulch Saloon is the epitome of a simple, yet special, small-town bar in South Dakota. It's had the same owner for the past 37 years; the food menu is written on a whiteboard above the bar; it had no working air conditioner on Saturday; and it didn't have beer on tap (instead, most of the brews were served from a cooler on the saloon's porch on Saturday.)

It does have a lot of friendly people, an inviting atmosphere and the little touches that make the bar feel like it isn't just a building, but a living entity. Unique features include a signed dollar bill taped to the back of the bar about 15 years ago and the collection of baseball caps that hang from a wall.

All day Saturday, the bikers and regulars seemed to be having a blast. Some of the old-timers were swapping stories about past rides on the porch, while others were inside waving their brews in the air while singing along to a spontaneous rendition of Jimmy Buffet's "Margaritaville" by guitarist Donald Bachmeier, who has been coming from St. Paul, Minnesota, to the Moonshine Gulch for the past 15 years.

At one point, Kerstetter formed a smiley face in the middle of the road by performing a burnout on his 2003 Harley-Davidson Fat Boy, drawing applause from the crowd.

"Bikers are the nicest, coolest people in world," Kohl said. "I've seen one cranky guy in the past seven years."

There are plenty of places and parties across the Hills and beyond for people who want to enjoy the rally without staying in Sturgis the whole week.

Nurses Will Be In Demand In South Dakota

SIoux FALLS (AP) — A state analysis has concluded that people able to care for patients, children or customers will find a favorable job market in South Dakota in the next decade.

The study by the Department of Labor predicts that the most annual job openings in the state through 2022, on average, will be in the fields of nursing, customer service and child care.

"We are definitely a service economy," Mary Medema, director of workforce development for the Sioux Falls Development Foundation, told the Argus Leader.

There will be an average annual demand for 370 registered nurses through 2022, according to the study. There also is expected to be a need for hundreds of other health care employees, including nursing assistants, pharmacists and dental hygienists.

The projected need for health care workers is alarming, South Dakota State University gerontology specialist Leacey Brown told the Capital Journal.

"I am concerned with how we are going to generate these people," she said. "Where are these folks going to come from? Are we going to encourage some of the nurses who are older, but still really healthy, to stay in the workforce longer?"

Brown said the health care industry might need to consider things such as flexible scheduling.

"Maybe you have three nurses sharing a full-time job," she said. "We have to look for innovative opportunities to encourage folks who have the skills that we need to continue to use their skills."

The study also found that interpreting and translating is expected to be the fastest-growing job field by percentage in South Dakota in coming years. The demand is expected to grow by about 40 percent, from 285 workers to 400.

Second Judicial Circuit Court Administrator Karl Thoennes told the Argus Leader that he coordinates an average of seven hearings a day that require an interpreter.

"We have an interpreter demand all out of proportion to the caseload," he said.

SF Police Say 2 Dead Inside Home

SIoux FALLS (AP) — Police are investigating the apparent murder-suicide of a man and woman inside a Sioux Falls home.

Sioux Falls Police Lt. Matt Burns says officers responded just before 2 p.m. Wednesday after a relative who was in the residence called 911.

Burns says the man and woman lived in the residence together and were in a relationship. He says they died from apparent gunshot wounds.

The names of the victims have not been released.

First Mosquito-Borne Virus Recorded

SIoux FALLS (AP) — State health officials say South Dakota has recorded its first case of a mosquito-borne virus that has been spreading in the U.S. from the Caribbean.

State epidemiologist Lon Kightlinger tells the Sioux Falls Argus Leader that the chikungunya (chik-ehn-GUHN'-yeh) virus has been diagnosed in someone who was visiting the island of St. Lucia in July.

Kightlinger says the victim is an adult, but would release no other details. The victim was diagnosed in South Dakota after returning from vacation.

Chikungunya virus is rarely fatal. Infected people typically suffer fever, severe joint pain and swelling, muscle aches, headaches or rash.

Patients usually recover in about a week, although some people suffer long-term joint pain. There is no vaccine and no specific treatment.

Neb. Sued Over SNAP Benefits

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Two advocacy groups are suing Nebraska on behalf of a single mother who says she faced repeated delays when renewing her federal food benefits.

The lawsuit alleges that the Department of Health and Human Services failed to process the request in a timely manner, as required by federal law.

It was filed on behalf of Tami Leiting-Hall, a fast food worker in Lincoln, and other Nebraskans who have applied for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program since Jan. 1, 2012.

Nebraska processes SNAP benefits through the ACCESS Nebraska system, which has been criticized in recent years for causing delays and errors. Leiting-Hall is represented by Nebraska Appleseed and the National Center for Law and Economic Justice.

Nebraska DHHS spokesman Russ Reno says the department doesn't comment on pending lawsuits.

Man's Trial In Death Of Girl Is Delayed

GERING, Neb. — A trial has been delayed for a 27-year-old man accused in the death of a 2-year-old Gering girl in 2008.

Jury selection was scheduled to begin this coming Monday for the trial of Dustin Chauncey. But his attorneys requested a delay because of a death in one of their families. The trial now is scheduled to begin Oct. 27.

Chauncey has pleaded not guilty to intentional child abuse resulting in the death of Juliette Geurts in July 2008. Chauncey was the boyfriend at the time of the girl's mother, Charlyse Geurts. Charges against her have been dismissed because of the statute of limitations.

Company Reopens Neb. Ethanol Plant

AURORA, Neb. (AP) — A corn-fed ethanol plant in south-central Nebraska that has been idle since 2012 has reopened thanks to an improved market, a company executive said.

Aventine Renewable Energy Inc. has resumed operation of its Vogelbusch Nebraska Energy LLC plant near Aurora. Aventine President and CEO Mark Beemer told The Grand Island Independent that corn prices are hovering around $3.50 a bushel, compared with nearly $8 a bushel in August 2012.

"We decided to restart it due to the positive ethanol margin environment," Beemer said.

Aventine has a second plant in Hamilton County, called Aurora West, that has been producing ethanol from beet sugar but will switch to corn by this fall, Beemer said.

It's unclear whether that corn will be purchased from the Aurora Cooperative Elevator, which has been locked in a legal struggle with Aventine. The cooperative sued Aventine over rail access and corn-supply agreements in connection with the Aurora West plant.

Both sides accuse the other of violating the corn purchase agreement. They've been negotiating a settlement, but Beemer told the Lincoln Journal Star they aren't close to settling their differences. Co-op spokeswoman Dawn Caldwell told The Associated Press on Wednesday that the smaller Vogelbusch plant isn't using corn from the co-op.

The co-op said in a statement that it wants both plants "to be fully functional and operating to create additional markets for our grain producer-owners. The Aurora Cooperative will continue to seek opportunities to settle with Aventine."

Caldwell said, "We want the plants to be successful." Pekin, Illinois-based Aventine also has plants in Pekin and Dayton, Illinois.

SD High School Coach Publicly Announces He's Gay

DELL RAPIDS (AP) — A volleyball and baseball coach at St. Mary High School in Dell Rapids who has publicly announced he's gay says he feels elated, though he worries it might affect his employment at the private Catholic school.

Nate Alfson made the announcement Tuesday in an online essay he posted on the website www.outsports.com. Local sportscaster Mike Henriksen said Alfson is believed to be the first openly gay high school coach in South Dakota.

"When you're the first at anything, I think that's big," Henriksen told the Argus Leader newspaper, adding that Alfson's decision might help high school athletes who are gay. "Nate is a coach and an athlete, and I think that opens a few more doors."

Alfson, 25, graduated from high school in Pipestone, Minnesota, in 2007, and went on to play baseball at Augustana College in Sioux Falls. He said he has known he was gay since he was in ninth grade. He said he struggled with it but has now decided "to share with the world that it is OK to be who you are born as and feel confident about it."

"I have found that there are other people in the world just like me and I don't have to feel alone any longer," he wrote.

Alfson said he has received support but also is prepared for criticism and strong reactions to his decision, including the possibility that it might jeopardize his coaching job.

"This might be a challenge but I am confident it will work out for the best and the Earth will still keep turning regardless of the outcome," he wrote. "I hope it doesn't affect my opportunity to be a good role model for the athletes."

School officials did not immediately respond to requests for comment.
