You've likely heard of the success North Dakota State has in those games: the Bison beat Kansas State last year, and then you had Northern Iowa beating Iowa State. And you remember the University of South Dakota beating Minnesota in 2010, and South Dakota State nearly scoring an FBS win in 2009 and 2010. For schools like USD and SDSU, those are mostly paycheck games. You're getting a nice payday (typically between $400K-500K) to make the trip to an FBS stadium and walk away with a loss. Now, to be fair, most of these FCS vs. FBS games are blowouts. The Jackrabbits suffered a 56-3 loss to Illinois in 2011 and a 59-20 loss at Nebraska last season. The Coyotes were handed a 59-10 whooping by Wisconsin in 2011 and haven't gotten closer than 17 points to any FBS opponent since the Minnesota victory

But if you ask any USD or SDSU coach or player, they'll tell you the experience gained in such a game is worth the trip - and, potentially, worth a blowout.

When you can walk out on the field at Memorial Stadium in Lincoln or out onto the field with an SEC team (like SDSU will at Missouri), it's one of those memories you can't soon forget. The Coyotes will find themselves in a similar sitaution Saturday night when they take the field against an Oregon team that could very well find itself in the first-ever college football playoffs. In short, it will be the best team USD will ever face - unless, of course, the Coyote administration schedules an upcoming game against an Alabama or a Florida State.

For now, though, the Jacks and Coyotes will take one more crack against the 'big boys.

It's not likely that either team walks out of Saturday's games with a victory, but if you ask those players in five years what they remember, I would bet playing at Missouri or Oregon would be rather high.

Schedules

"We don't want to be going some place we didn't even know existed."

Instead, if SDSU can schedule a game within driving distance for fans and alumni in the area, that would be ideal, according to athletic director Justin Sell.

"That's been a high prior-ity for us," Sell said. "We look at them as great days for our university, not just the athletic department. It gives everyone a chance to rally behind something together."

And yes, if that school making the trip can leave with a big paycheck, that's another bonus for playing up a level.

For making the trip to Eugene, USD will receive $525,000, which is by far the most it has ever received in six previous FBS games. It is, however, not the highest in recent memory for the Missouri Valley Football Conference — Michigan State paid Youngstown State $650,000 for last season's matchup.

"It certainly helps, there's no doubt about that," Herb-ster said. "You don't want to live on those things, either, though.' Some FCS schools will play two FBS games a season, to earn two large paychecks. USD has done that twice, back in 2010 with Central Florida and Minnesota, and in 2011 with Air Force and Wisconsin.

Missouri Valley school Northern Iowa is playing two FBS games this year, and it did the same thing back in 2012. Indiana State also played two, last fall against Indiana and Purdue.

South Dakota State, meanwhile, has played one FBS game a year since 2008.

"Fortunately we're not in that position," Sell said.

Finding a game that fits the above-mentioned criteria now presents challenges, however, Herbster said.

He called it "frustrating" that the Big Ten Conference — and its many regional schools — would prefer its members to avoid scheduling FCS games. Why?

Because, the conference pushed for 12-game seasons, to get one more game to reach six wins (and bowl eligibility), he said. But now, with the Big Ten television network and its national audience, the league wants higher-profile games.

Yearly

Check-Up

Today!

South Dakota State has already been directly affected by the Big Ten situation. The Jackrabbits were supposed to face Minnesota in 2016, but that contract got bought out by Texas Christian, which means SDSU is now traveling to TCU in 2016.

"That's probably as far out as we'd like to go," Sell said.

The fear from FBS schools about scheduling a lowerlevel opponent that could very well win the game was proven to be rather accurate last season. The FCS members scored 16 victories against FBS schools last season, an increase from 10 in 2012.

That very well might prove that the FCS brand is rather competitive with the big boys,' Sell said. Some of the schools in our league, and some of the others in the country, can be just as good as the middletier teams in some FBS conferences," he said. "I hope in time we can get to the point of labeling it by quality programs, and not by divisions." Another challenge in scheduling FBS games? Schools have no way of knowing how the game will look down the line — sometimes those games are scheduled as far out as 7-8 years.

"You never know how someone's going to be a few years in advance," Herbster said. "We certainly didn't see them being the number three team in the country."

Down the line, the Jackrabbits will visit Kansas next season, Texas Christian in 2016 and Iowa State in 2018. The Coyotes have games scheduled at Kansas State next season and at Iowa State for 2020.

As for the matter at hand this week, traveling to SEC country to face Missouri, the Jackrabbits are trying to avoid the awe factor, Stiegelmeier said.

"I don't want our guys to go down there and think we're playing a team in a dif-ferent world," he said.

The Coyotes have said the same thing all pre-season. They realize who they're playing Saturday night, but they're treating this is a oncein-a-lifetime experience, according to junior quarterback Kevin Earl.

"It's going to be unlike anything we've been a part of," he said. "It'll be a memory I'll hold for the rest of my life.'
