these pieces of equipment. "Typically, a little bit of paint doesn't hurt anything, but in this case this paint does not dry until it's been baked at 350 degrees for an unspecified amount of time," he said. "If we would try to clean it with a solvent, the problem is it reduces the flashover resistance of that gear. Our gear is about 1,350 degrees where it accepts a flashover for up to 60 seconds. Anytime you've got grease and oils and paints into the material, it reduces that temperature rating." Estimated equipment losses are around $20,000. Perakslis said he was grateful that the situation didn't end up being any worse than it was. "No one was hurt," he said. "Our employees were evacuated quickly. The fire department was here very quickly, so I want to thank the Yankton and Gayville fire departments. They came in and got it resolved as quickly as they could which allowed us to get back in the plant quickly and clean up. I was very happy with how the plant reacted. Everything was done safely. No one from the fire department was hurt, no one from Sapa Yankton was hurt so we're very happy about that."
