Rainfall Simulations Set For Dakotafest

BROOKINGS - A lot can be learned about soil health by watching water infiltration, explains Pete Bauman, SDSU Extension Range Field Specialist.

"Water infiltration varies depending on organic matter, erosion, compaction, soil fertility, carbon sequestration, etc. — all these important factors determine whether or not a field or pasture is healthy or in need of repair," Bauman explained.

South Dakotans can see for themselves during the daily Rainfall Simulator presentations held at 2015 Dakotafest Aug. 18-20, in the SDSU Extension Pavilion at 9:30 a.m.

The SDSU Extension Pavilion is in a new location in booth 600, located on the corner of 6th Street and the West Entrance (for Dakotafest regulars, this is the road which leads past the ribeye sandwiches on the way to the northwest corner.)

The simulation is co-hosted by SDSU Extension and South Dakota Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS).

The rainfall simulator was developed by NRCS and is a live demonstration that "simulates" real rainfall events to test water infiltration in several different soil management situations including: conventional tilled cropland, no-till cropland, no-till cropland with cover crops, poorly managed rangeland and healthy rangeland.

"NRCS staffers Jeff Hemenway and Stan Boltz have been doing this presentation for a long time, and SDSU Extension is fortunate to partner with NRCS for this forum," Bauman said. "It's our job to provide South Dakota farmers and ranchers with research-based information that they can apply to improve their operations — this simulator is a great tool to provide a first-hand look at the best soil management techniques for cropland as well as grazing lands."

He added that many Dakotafest attendees have operations with both crops and livestock — basically most wear two hats. "They wear their cowboy hat taking care of livestock and put on the baseball cap when they farm," Bauman said. "When we discuss soil management, people frequently assume it only impacts cropland, but the fact is, there is a lot that can be done to improve rangeland productivity — this presentation will address both."

During the demonstrations, time will be set aside for attendees to ask Bauman as well as the NRCS representatives, Jeff Hemenway and Stan Boltz, questions. Bauman will also be available to discuss pasture-related topics, such as estimating forage production, managing plant communities, dung beetle management, prescribed fire and other issues.

Artists & Activities Abound At Upcoming Art In The Garden

Plans are well underway for this year's art in the Garden a Celebration of Arts in Centerville which will be held Sunday, August 30 from 4:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m. downtown Centerville, SD.

The Centerville Community Arts Council, Inc. is pleased to announce that this year's featured guest artists at the sidewalk arts festival will be Judy Thompson and Elise Parsley.

Judy Thompson's watercolor silver Lake Reflections adorns the cover of the book Pioneer Girl: The annotated Autobiography of Laura Ingalls Wilder. The book, which has been put out by the SD Historical Society recently topped Amazon's bestseller list. Born and raised in Chicago, Illinois, Judy now lives in Orange City, Iowa. Selected twice as artist-in-residence with the National Park System, Judy describes her watercolors as contemporary Midwest landscapes and figures. Her watercolor batiks of butterflies and birds which can be seen on her website are breathtaking. Thompson will be available at the Centerville Senior Citizens Center and will offer a fun activity for all ages using watercolor and ink. Be sure to stop in, view her work and try your hand at painting.

The author-illustrator of if You Ever Want to Bring an Alligator to School, Don't resides in Beresford, SD where her husband is pastor of Skrefsrud Lutheran Church.
