proposed from Canada to Texas. Obama recently announced he was postponing a decision until after the 2012 elections on the much-studied proposal. Environmentalists oppose the project, but several unions support it, and the legislation puts the president in the uncomfortable position of having to choose between customary political allies.

Republican senators leaving a closed-door meeting put the price tag of the two-month package at between $30 billion and $40 billion said the cost would be covered by raising fees on new mortgages backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

The legislation would also provide a 60-day reprieve from a scheduled 27 percent cut in the fees paid to doctors who treat Medicare patients.

Several officials said it would require a decision within 60 days on the pipeline, with the president required to authorize construction unless he determined that would not be in the national interest.

Senators in both parties hastened to claim credit for the deal.

Sen. Richard Lugar issued a statement that said the compromise included legislation he authored "that forces President Obama to make a decision" on the pipeline. The Indiana Republican faces a strong primary challenge next year from a tea party-backed rival.

Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he had "brokered a final deal by bringing lawmakers from both parties together to support jobs."

Not all Democrats were as upbeat. "Look, this was tough. Harry (Reid) had to negotiate with Boehner and with McConnell," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., referring to House Speaker John Boehner and Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell, the two Republican leaders in Congress.

Officials said that in private talks, the two sides had hoped to reach agreement on the full one-year extension of payroll tax cuts and jobless benefits that Obama had made the centerpiece of the jobs program he submitted to Congress last fall.

Those efforts failed when the two sides could not agree on enough offsetting cuts to make sure the deficit wouldn't rise.

Reid, in a statement, blamed Republicans, saying they had wanted to "cut Medicare benefits for seniors" and Democrats refused. GOP officials disputed him.

"We'll be back discussing the same issues in a couple of months, but from our point of view, we think the keystone pipeline is a very important job-creating measure in the private sector that doesn't cost the government a penny," said Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, the Republican leader.

There was no immediate reaction from House Speaker John Boehner. Neither he nor his aides participated in the negotiations, although McConnell said he was optimistic about the measure's chances for final approval.

Hours earlier, McConnell challenged Obama to give ground.

"Let's not just pass a bill that helps people on the benefits side, let's also include something that actually helps the private sector create the jobs Americans need for the long term," he said.

In a political jab, he added, "Here's an opportunity for the president to say he's not going to let a few radical environmentalists stand in the way of a project that would create thousands of jobs and make America more secure at the same time."

lives up to that expectation. These are true musicians that get together, and that time is used so well, that we put on a very decent concert.

"The other scary part for me and the conductor is we really don't know who is going to be there. We have a common set of folks of about 140 different people that have played throughout the last 10 years, and we are not sure who will be there until rehearsal. It really is a fantastic group that they can come together and put it together so quickly. I think everybody is so busy, so getting together when we do and making it work, is just convenient."

This year's conductor is Brian LeMaster from Mitchell.

"This concert started off as a suggestion from the band that wanted to get together to do a Christmas concert," Carr said. "It just continued and has gone well, except for a couple bad snow days, we have really had a good time with this concert."

Carr said if there are people in the community who are interested in participating, they are more than welcome.

"We get the occasionally very talented sixth grader, all the way to a clarinet player in late 70s, if not early 80s, and everything in between," he said. "It is just an amazing amount of talent that comes in. Unfortunately, I don't have the ability to loan out instruments, so people do need to bring their own instruments."

The concert is open to the public at no charge. In addition to the concert, the Services Center Federal Credit Union will be providing cider and cookies afterwards in the commons area.

The Yankton Area Concert series is sponsored by Yankton Area Arts and the City of Yankton. For more information, call Yankton Area Arts (605) 665-9754.
