Trial Set For Keadle In Fremont Rape Case

FREMONT, Neb. (AP) — A man questioned in the disappearance of a Peru State College student is scheduled to go trial in March on charges that he raped a teenager in Fremont in 2008.

Thirty-year-old Joshua Keadle is charged with first-degree sexual assault of a minor. The Fremont Tribune says a judge on Tuesday scheduled Keadle's trial for March 13 in Dodge County District Court.

Authorities say Keadle is a person of interest in the December 2010 disappearance of Peru State student, Tyler "Ty" Thomas. No charges have been filed against Keadle in that case.

Keadle, originally from Swansea, S.C., was accused of sexually assaulting another Peru State College student on Halloween night in 2010. Prosecutors dropped those charges last month after a hearing on new evidence in the case.

Judge Refuses To Accept Plea In Murder Case

SIOUX FALLS (AP) — A judge said Wednesday he cannot accept a guilty plea from a man accused of killing a 75-year-old Sioux Falls woman until he hears testimony from psychiatrist.

James McVay is charged with first-degree murder and burglary in the July 2 death of Maybelle Schein. Police say McVay stabbed Schein to death and then stole her car as part of a scheme to drive to Washington, D.C., and kill President Obama.

The state has said it would seek the death penalty.

KELO-TV reports that the 41-year-old McVay appeared in a Sioux Falls courtroom Wednesday and pleaded guilty but mentally ill to firstdegree murder.

A hearing to determine McVay's mental health status has not been scheduled

Sturgis Police Seize 59 Pounds Of Pot

RAPID CITY (AP) - A traffic stop in Sturgis, S.D., led to the arrests of two men and the seizure of 59 pounds of marijuana, making it one of the largest drug busts in the city's history, a state's attorney said.

A Sturgis patrolman pulled over a pickup truck with California plates for speeding while traveling east on Interstate 90 near exit 32 Sunday morning, police said. During a search of the truck, police said officers found nearly 60 pounds of marijuana.

Meade County State's Attorney Kevin Krull on Tuesday said the bust was "probably near the top of the biggest" for Sturgis police, the Rapid City Journal reported.

It's rare for this much marijuana to be found in a vehicle," Krull said.

Nicholas James Schneider, 27, of Key West, Fla., and Andrew Michael Robertson, 21, of Tulsa, Okla., face charges of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and possession of marijuana more than 10 pounds.

Schneider, who police said was driving, also is charged with possession of drug paraphernalia and possession of a controlled substance.

Fifty-three-year-old John Baker is charged with second-degree murder in the death of 47-year-old Kelly Aslpach. Her body was found on Oct. 21 stuffed in a window seat in their home. An autopsy showed she died of blunt force trauma to the head and asphyxia.

Baker was arrested Oct. 24 at a relative's house in Garrison, N.D. KTIV-TV in Sioux City, Iowa, says McLean County State's Attorney

Ladd Erickson says a judge on Wednesday ordered Baker to be returned to Nebraska within 10 days.

Neb., Iowa Grew Slightly Since 2010

BY GRANT SCHULTE Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Iowa and Nebraska's populations grew at a rate slower than the whole nation between July 2010 and 2011, according to U.S. Census estimates released Wednesday.

Press&Dakotan

Both states posted gains below 1 percent. The report shows Iowa added 12,107 new residents, a 0.4 percent increase over the oneyear period that ended July 1. Nebraska's population grew by 12,500, a 0.7 percent increase.

Nebraska's growth rate slipped after a two-year stretch of outpacing the national average. The state's annual growth rate has exceeded the U.S. rate only seven times since 1900, said David Drozd, research coordinator for the University of Nebraska Omaha's Center for Public Affairs Research.

"These numbers are relatively good, but they're not as good as we thought they'd be," Drozd said. "It still is a strong growth trend just not as strong as we'd expected."

Drozd said Nebraska's slowdown could

SIOUX FALLS — A record-setting string of suspicious fires in South Dakota's largest city has stopped as suddenly as it started.

No one has been arrested in connection with the blazes, which began in early September in the central portion of the city and damaged dozens of sheds, garages and vehicles. As many as 28 fires might have been started by the same person or people, Sioux Falls Assistant Fire Marshall Michael Top said Wednesday.

That makes up more than 70 percent of the 39 intentionally set fires reported so far in 2011, Top said. Just 25 arsons were reported in all of 2010, according to FBI data. In 2009, there were 24.

"We're happy with the end re-sult that the fires have stopped so no one else is losing property," Top said. "But it would have been nice to find the responsible person or persons to know for sure that it's done."

The fires stopped after law-enforcement officials announced the formation of a task force and offered a $10,000 reward leading to an arrest.

The investigation will continue.

have come from baby boomers taking advantage of low housing prices in Arizona, Nevada and other states where property values have tumbled

He attributed Nebraska's population gains to births that outnumbered deaths, and a gain of about 2,500 people who moved to the state from abroad. Nebraska has maintained one of the nation's lowest unemployment rates over the past several years because of the strength of agriculture businesses and the relative stability of the state's real estate market.

Iowa's growth rate held at roughly the same average it has maintained over the last decade. said Liesl Eathington, an Iowa State University researcher in regional economics.

'It doesn't look like there's been a whole lot of change, despite the recession," Eathington said. "In some ways, that's a good thing. We don't look a whole lot worse or a whole lot better than the rest of the Midwest."

Eathington said Iowa has weathered the downturn better than most states, but is still struggling to create the kind of jobs that help accelerate population growth.

The biggest population gainers were Texas, California, Florida, Georgia and North Carolina, according to the estimates. The five states accounted for more than half of the nation's overall growth. The District of Columbia's growth rate outpaced all the states at 2.7 percent.

The U.S. population grew to 311.6 million, a 0.92 percent gain between April 2010 and July 2011, the estimates show. In a statement, Census Bureau Director Robert Groves said the overall growth rate was the lowest since the baby boom of the mid-1940s.

Rhode Island, Michigan and Maine were the only states to lose residents.

The Census estimates are based on documented births, deaths, administrative records and survey data. Researchers and governments use the information to measure growth trends, make policy decisions and allocate tax money. More detailed information about counties and cities is expected in May.

Feds List Possible Methods For Blocking Asian Carp

BY JOHN FLESHER

AP Environmental Writer

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. - Federal officials said Wednesday they were evaluating dozens of options for stopping Asian carp and other invasive species from crossing between the Great Lakes and Mississippi River systems and doing environmental harm in their new surroundings.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers released a report listing more than 90 options for blocking the path of would-be aquatic migrants, including poisoning sections of waterways, installing devices that emit light and sound waves, and inducing genetic changes to prevent organisms from reproducing.

The report did not indicate which controls the Army Corps might prefer or evaluate their effectiveness or potential cost. Project manager Dave Wethington said experts will pare down the "shopping list" to determine which methods are likely to work best. They will accept public comments from Dec. 21 to Feb. 17.

"It's very important that we cover all the possible combinations of technologies," said John Goss, the Obama administration's Asian carp program coordinator.

Among the alternatives is installing barriers or other structures to sever the century-old. man-made link between the two systems near Lake Michigan in the Chicago area. That method is preferred by Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio and ing industry by gobbling up plankton needed by other organisms in the food web.

Goss said an electric barrier network on a shipping canal southwest of Chicago is preventing Asian carp and other fish from swimming northward toward Lake Michigan. No bighead or silver carp — the two Asian species threatening to attack the lakes — have been found beyond the barrier this year, although their genetic material continues to turn up in water samples there. The Army Corps strengthened the barrier's electric pulses this fall

Still, Goss said the barrier was designed to deter fish and wouldn't necessarily prevent other organisms from getting through.

The Corps also is looking at 18 other waterways from New York to Minnesota that could provide pathways between the two watersheds.

Some of the technologies in Wednesday's report are already in use, including fish and plant poisons and stepped-up harvesting by commercial fishermen. Others are still under development.

Among the possibilities are creating high-velocity waterfalls to block upstream passage, zapping species with ultraviolet light or ultrasound, sucking oxygen from the water or raising its temperature to lethal levels, and using biological repellents or pheromones to lure invaders to places where they could be trapped or killed.

The Army Corps will report to Congress on its findings in late 2015 or early 2016, said Gary O'-Keefe, invasive species program manager for the Great Lakes. Federal officials have said previously the study would be completed in 2015.
