

Menorah Lawsuit Is Resolved In Time For Hanukkah

BY JOSEPH FREEMAN

LEESBURG, Fla. — The menorah inside the social hall of a Florida retirement community costs more than a flat-screen TV and is taller than the average man.

The 6-foot, $1,000 candelabra at Legacy of Leesburg resulted from a legal settlement after a rabbi who lives in the community complained to the homeowners association that the tiny menorah on a table in the hall was dwarfed by a much-larger Christmas tree.

"I felt that it was unfair," said Rabbi Arthur Grae of Leesburg's Congregation Or Chayim, who has lived at the Lake County development on U.S. Highway 27 since 2005.

The oversized menorah, which like all others has nine branches for lights or candles, was in place for the start of Hanukkah this week, though hard feelings linger about how it got there. The case threatened to turn the Festival of Lights — another name for the Jewish holiday — into the Festival of Fights.

The disagreement started over decorations. Every time Grae drove over to the social hall, he passed holiday wreaths on lampposts and doors, lights strung on bushes and plywood animals that he referred to in the lawsuit as "cavorting reindeer" on the front lawn.

In August, the homeowners association rejected a proposal from Grae and others to purchase a 6-foot aluminum menorah that lights up when plugged in and place it outside the social hall. Board members thought that buying and moving it there would necessitate hauling out the Christmas tree as well so equal attention is paid to both holidays.

They also insisted that most of the decorations, such as the wreaths and reindeer, were generic seasonal items and not religious symbols. Instead, the association voted to buy a standard-sized menorah, usually a little more than a foot high, to replace the one already on display.

Todd Koechlein, the homeowners association president, viewed the decision as a good compromise that would please everybody. Grae, who before retiring spent his career as a New York lawyer specializing in labor and constitutional law, didn't see it that way and filed suit in circuit court. He and three other plaintiffs viewed the refusal to purchase and put in their menorah as a violation of the right to freely exercise their religion.

"It's a question of recognition of the Jewish people as equal in the eyes of the law, and equal as residents of Legacy," Grae said.

When Koechlein learned that a lawsuit had been filed with the aim of making the homeowners association install the giant menorah outside, he was stunned.

"The surprising thing to me is that we have Jewish members on the board, and the board vote was a unanimous vote," Koechlein said. "And I've never heard anybody complain or even talk about their religion and relationship to the community."

The parties reached a settlement last month that gave Grae what he wanted: the large menorah, paid for by the plaintiffs and placed where the previous display had been: indoors.

The Leesburg tiff isn't the first over proportional holiday displays. In 2007, some Long Beach, N.Y., residents complained when a 7-foot-tall Christmas tree was planted next to a 20-foot-tall menorah in front of City Hall. The city quickly found a 20-foot tree to end the discrepancy.

Residents at Legacy of Leesburg, on both sides of the issue, are less concerned with constitutional aspects of the lawsuit than the rift it has caused between neighbors and friends.

Grae wasn't welcome to attend the Hanukkah party Tuesday at the social hall, where residents marked the beginning of the eight-day celebration with the menorah he helped bring about.

One of his fellow plaintiffs, Marc Nacson, said the lawsuit was "a last resort." He invited neighbors to the party for the first night of Hanukkah to try to heal any festering resentment and let bygones be bygones. He said about 75 people, many of whom weren't Jewish, showed up for the lighting of the new menorah.

"Let's go back to some sort of normalcy and brotherhood. This is what we're all about."

The Baby's Arrival Changes Things

BY JEREMY NELSON
Youth Pastor at Calvary Baptist Church

While this article is being published on the 30th, I'm actually writing it two weeks ahead of time. By God's grace, my wife will be giving birth sometime between the date of my writing this and the date that it's published. Needless to say, this is an exciting time for our family. We also know that the arrival of this baby will change our lives dramatically.

We are preparing for the changes in whatever ways we can. Our list of things to complete around the house before the baby comes has been completed. Our other two children are adjusting to sharing a room. We have a few meals ready to go in the freezer and people at the church know I'll be taking a few personal days away to love and serve my family. We bought a box of diapers and we pulled out the tote labeled 0-12 months filled with hand-me-down clothing from the first two.

Yet as we prepare, there are some details we just don't know yet. We don't know the gender of the baby and we don't know which features will be inherited from which parent. We don't know how healthy our baby will be or what kind of temperament he or she will have.

There are, though, things we are quite certain will change regardless of the things yet unknown. We expect less sleep and more RPD (Rockings Per Day) in our recliners. We will never leave the house without the diaper bag and we'll begin to use the back seat in our minivan. Another chair will soon be added to our table and we'll soon be spoon-feeding a child those nasty mashed up peas from a jar. We will have more responsibility and more joy, more headaches and more laughter. We are grateful for the upcoming arrival of our baby and we know it will change our lives.

While the arrival of our baby will certainly change our lives dramatically, chances are that our baby's arrival may not have any noticeable effect on the majority of you reading this article. Just 5 days ago, the majority of people in our nation celebrated the arrival of a Baby. This Baby, born just over 2000 years ago was God in human flesh. And this Baby's arrival has changed and will continue to change things for all of creation (including you) in much more dramatic ways than the arrival of any other baby in history.

This Baby came to seek and save lost people (Luke 19), and give new life to spiritually dead people (Ephesians 2). Now that is change! This Baby, fully God and fully human, would grow up to be a man, live a sinless life, suffer under the Father's wrath as He bore our sins on the cross, and be raised again to life. He has ascended and is seated on His throne in heaven where He is constantly worshipped as the King of all Kings and Lord of all Lords. 1 John 4:9 says that "God sent His only Son into the world, so that we might have life through Him." So are you really living? Are you living with a saving, life-transforming faith in Jesus? Are you awaiting and preparing for His second coming as He arrives (not as a baby this time) to judge the world and make all things new? By God's grace, have you put your faith in Christ and in Christ alone? We don't know all of the details of His upcoming arrival but we do know it is coming. This One's arrival and your response to Him truly changes things.

What Is The Meaning Of Christmas

© 2011 McClatchy Newspapers

BRING LIGHT THROUGH SELF-SACRIFICE

The Rev. Pat Rush, pastor, Visitation Catholic Church, Kansas City, Mo.: In the midst of winter, when the days are shortest and the nights longest, Jews and Christians celebrate Holy Days of light. Hanukkah for the Jews and Christmas Day for nontiturgical Christians or the Advent-Christmas seasons for liturgical Christians celebrate the light of God's presence among us. For the Jews it is the light of God's presence in the temple; for Christians it is the light of God's presence in the person of Jesus Christ. Jews light their menorahs, and Christians light their Christmas trees and, in some cases, Advent wreaths; the commercial world turns on the Country Club Plaza lights.

So, what's the true meaning of the holiday season? I guess it depends on whom you ask.

On the Tuesday of Thanksgiving week The Star carried an article about two homeless women who, with their children, were living at the City Union Mission in Kansas City and, despite their poverty, used some of what little money they had to help others in need. They pooled stipends given them by the mission and bought gifts for unknown people in faraway lands who have less than they have.

I think that is the best expression I've seen in a while of the true meaning of the holiday season: bringing the light of God's love to others, at some sacrifice to ourselves.

HONOR THE HOLIDAY WITH PEACE, LOVE

The Rev. Duke Tufty, pastor, Unity Temple on the Plaza, Kansas City: I believe the true meaning of every holiday can be summed up with three words. Retreat from the hubbub of the hurried, stressful and average day.

Reflect on the true meaning of the holiday. If a person is being honored, determine what that person stood for; what the message is that he or she brought forth; what difference that person made in the world. If the holiday is to honor a particular practice or ritual, once again reflect on the deeper meaning and determine the difference it can make in your life.

Respond to your reflections by setting forth an intention or resolution to improve your life by increasing the degree you express a particular noble attribute in your life. For instance, Jesus stood for joy, peace and love. What can you do to increase the joy, peace and love in your life?

In this holiday season take time to retreat, reflect and respond. Then celebrate! Break the holiday tradition of taking on more than is comfortable and becoming stressed. If your obligations seem too great, pare them back. If your "to-do" list is too long, cut it in half. Perhaps as you read this you are wondering how that could possibly happen. When you make up your mind to do it, you will discover the way.
