• Something is seriously wrong when we can no longer depend on a white Christmas in South Dakota. After all, white Christmases are a tradition, and an important benefit of living in this northland. Without the reassurance that come Christmas Eve, all will be white, we might as well join Simon, Alvin and the other Chipmunks for Christmas, Hawaiian style.
• George Larsen, Yankton, is among 22 Northwestern College students who will spend part of their Christmas vacation serving others. Northwestern groups will participate in Winter Service Projects in Chicago and Omaha. Larsen will assist members of the Jesus People U.S.A. community. His ministry includes a feeding program and a shelter for people in emergency situations.

"I'm not sure a janitor is necessarily qualified to take down an armed shooter," she said. "I have some concerns about that specific proposal."

The children killed Friday were all 6 or 7 years old. Police say the gunman, 20-year-old Adam Lanza, first killed his mother at their home, and fatally shot himself inside the school as first responders arrived.

In a scenario described by Olson, armed school personnel could have felled Lanza with a lethal shot by waiting for him to reload or turn his head. Olson dismissed the idea that people attempting to intervene could injure others in the crossfire or become victims themselves. "They're going to be dead regardless, the way I see it, so (being armed) is the only chance they've got," she said.

The Connecticut shooting has sparked national debate on gun control, including talk of resurrecting a ban on assault weapons.

That's a discussion Buhl said is long overdue.

"We have to do what we can to keep weapons that were meant for battlegrounds out of schools," she said.

During last year's legislative session, Daugaard vetoed a bill approved by legislators that would have allowed most adults in the state to carry concealed handguns without a permit, essentially requiring little more than a driver's license.
