Area Under Winter Weather Advisory

From P&D Staff Reports

The Yankton area may finally get a taste of winter today (Thursday).

A winter weather advisory has been issued for the area from 9 a.m. today until 9 a.m. Friday. The forecast calls for snow to start falling early today and continuing through the late afternoon, with 3-5 inches possible.

Winds are expected to be 5-15 mph from the south, switching to the northeast. This may cause visibility to be less than a mile at times.

Yankton has been spared significant snowfall this season. The last time more than 2 inches of snow was received was on Feb. 23. when 3 inches were recorded. It was the final measurable snowfall of last winter.

 Nebraska and South Dakota appear to be headed toward a boundary dispute over fishing privileges on the Missouri River below Gavins Point Dam an area that Dell Dawson Aberdeen, chairman of the South Dakota Game Commission, calls a "no man's land.'

hours of Thursday.

After weeks of negotiations, the president urged lawmakers late last week to scale back their ambitions and send him legislation preventing tax cuts on all but the highest-earning Americans and extending unemployment benefits for the long-term jobless. Longer, term, he said he still supports deficit cuts that were key to the earlier talks.

"Everybody's got to give a little bit in a sensible way," he said at the White House.

The House has no plans to convene, following last week's rebellion in which conservatives torpedoed Speaker John Boehner's legislation to prevent scheduled

"How we get there, God only knows," the Ohio Republican said of efforts to protect the economy — and taxpayers — from the tax increases and spending cuts.

'Now is the time to show leadership, not kick the can down the road," Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said a little over a week ago after Boehner announced he would shift his own focus from bipartisan talks to the approach that eventually was torpedoed by his own rank and file.

It's a phrase that political leaders use when they want to suggest others want to avoid tackling major problems, and one that Boehner, House Majority Leader Eric Cantor of Virginia and even Obama as well as Reid have used.

We have a spending problem. We have to address it, And we're not going to address it by kicking the can down the road," the speaker said at a news conference late last week when he was asked about setting a vote on a plan that Democrats find acceptable. Cantor recently used the same approach in challenging Obama to agree to savings from Medicare and other benefit programs. "This has to be a part of this agreement or else we just continue to dig the hole deeper, asking folks to allow us to kick the can down the road further and that we don't want to do," he said on Nov. 28.

In fact, it's a phrase that has been in use for over a year as Obama and Republicans jockey for position on pocketbook issues.

In July, 2011, when he was struggling with Republicans over the threat of a first-ever government default, Obama said he had "heard reports that there may be some in Congress who want to do just enough to make sure that America avoids defaulting on our debt in the short term. But then wants to kick the can down the road when it comes to solving the larger problem, our deficit.'

A few months later, an extension of a payroll tax cut was the
