Winston An Easy, Hard Choice For Heisman

much pondering and discussion with my assistant Jeremy Hoeck, I decided that I could not and put him at the top of my ballot.

Second on my ballot was 2012 Heisman winner Johnny Manziel of Texas A&M. He may not have had all the impressive numbers that he did a year ago, he still averaged 368.2 total yards per game, and improved his yards per attempt (8.5 in 2012 to 9.5 this year), touchdown percentage (6.0 to 8.4) and percentage of completions for a first down or touchdown (57.6 to 63).

Third on my ballot was Alabama's A.J. McCarron. While some might consider this rewarding the career and not the season, McCarron improved his QB rating each season and completed more than half his passes in all but the Crimson Tide's season opener. He may not have been as flashy as Winston or Manziel, but he was a major reason the Tide were in the hunt for another national title. He also wasn't the reason they're not playing for the title, as he had a big-time performance in the loss to Auburn.

I also considered Auburn's Tre Mason, Ohio State's Braxton Miller and Boston College's Andre Williams, but I feel I chose well. Feel free to share your opinions on my choices.
