GRANT

SDN plans to add 140 miles to its backbone fiber optic network and 219 "middle mile" routes to connect communities to the Internet backbone. Then it's just a matter of connecting customers to the high-speed connections, said SDN Chief Executive Mark Shlanta.

Shlanta said there might have been a business case to connect these unserved and underserved spots over time, but the grant and $5 million of its own money will push up that timeline.

"What this program did is really accelerate hundreds of these locations onto the network in the next few years," he said.

SDN's existing network already reaches South Dakota's larger cities and medium-sized towns, but the additional spur routes will brings many new smaller towns onto the fiber optic lines.

Arctic Meeting A Turning Point For G-7

BY JANE WARDELL
AP Business Writer

IQALUIT, Nunavut — A meeting of finance officials from the Group of Seven leading industrialized countries in this tiny Arctic outpost certainly lived up to host Canada's billing as a gathering with a difference.

Ditching suits and ties, finance ministers and banking officials grinned in delight as they went dogsledding on frozen Frobisher Bay, crawled into igloos, had cozy chats by a roaring fire and caught glimpses of the Northern Lights.

Host Canadian Finance Minister Jim Flaherty sold the unusual location — the town of Iqaluit, population 7,000 — as a chance to take the G-7 back to its roots of informal straight talk among countries with similar economies and problems, rather than carefully crafted communiques and discussions with outsiders Russia or China.

The hoopla provided by the unique location may have been something of a smokescreen for the group's waning power as officials acknowledged privately that it is accepting its diminished role in a world where developing countries have grown in influence.

Yet they also indicated they found its less formal tone — more frank discussion, less time haggling over the communique — useful in its own way.

BLOOD

Marreel added around 85 percent of the Siouxland Community Blood Bank's donations come from their mobile units, which are often adversely affected by bad weather.

From routine needs to major accidents and surgeries, blood is needed at hospitals each day. Hospitals have blood supplies for immediate use, but drives are needed to replenish those supplies as soon as possible.

"Our community has really responded during times of need," said Warren Erickson, director of laboratory at Yankton's Avera Sacred Heart Hospital, in a release. "There have been many lives saved because of the generosity of blood donors that live here in Yankton and the surrounding area."

While blood donors are plentiful in Yankton and the surrounding area, recruitment is still key to providing a steady supply of blood for area hospitals.

"What we find is that people will donate blood if people are personally asked," Marreel said. "We often have testimonies from people who receive blood after accidents/medical treatments. Those are the folks who can really send a strong message on the difference that can be made."

To be eligible to donate blood, a person must be at least 16 years old (with parental permission), be in good health and not have donated blood within the past 56 days. A photo ID is also required during registration.

Loraditch, the blood bank's representative for several southeast South Dakota counties, admitted she is thankful to represent Yankton, as both people and area businesses continue to be very generous and giving.

"It's really great to work in Yankton," she said.

For more on area blood drives and additional information about the Siouxland Community Blood Bank, please visit their Web site at http://www.siouxlandbloodbank.org.
