Two Teens Injured In Colo. Middle School Shooting

LITTLETON, Colo. (AP) — A teacher tackled a man armed with a high-powered rifle just after two teenage students were shot Tuesday at a suburban Denver middle school that's just miles from Columbine High School, the site of one of the nation's deadliest school shootings, authorities said.

One male and one female were shot at about 3:30 p.m. outside Deer Creek Middle School in Littleton, Jefferson County Sheriff's office spokeswoman Jacki Kelley said. Both students were taken to a nearby hospital and were expected to survive.

Student Steven Seagraves said he was about 10 feet away when an adult approached students and asked them: "Do you guys go to this school?"

When the students said they did, he shot them, Seagraves said.

The suspect's name hasn't been released, but authorities say he's 32.

The school is about three miles southwest of Columbine High School, where two teens — Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris — killed 12 students and a teacher and wounded 23 others before killing themselves in 1999.

The middle school was temporarily locked down with about 30 students in the building. They were eventually taken to a nearby elementary school, where they were to meet up with their parents.

Students' parents were alerted through text messages, phone calls and e-mails, Jefferson County Schools spokeswoman Melissa Reeves said.

Kelley said authorities don't yet have a motive for the shootings.

RTEC

For RTEC manager Josh Svatos, the award is a humbling one that he attributes to the support of Yankton's manufacturing sector.

"It's just a testimony to the rest of the state that an organization like this can be done, it can survive, and it is all predicated on partnerships," he said. "Really, it is a team effort. When the dust settles and the smoke clears at the end of the day, it is all about providing opportunities for middle school kids, high school kids, adults looking for career changes, or the person off the street who is just looking to enhance their skills. It is about providing an opportunity that wasn't there before, and I firmly believe that's why we are so successful: because we get the job done.

Svatos also said the award proves there is a need for the programming and opportunities that RTEC offers the community.

"More and more students and adults are finding out that career and technical education jobs are the future," he said. "There is a time and place for the four-year colleges; there is a time and place for career and technical education; and right now, there is a lot of demand for career- and technical-educated people."

Evans and Svatos both agreed that the overwhelming support that RTEC receives is unique not only to South Dakota but also to the country. They added that more communities are emulating what they see in Yankton.

"I think education driven by the manufacturing community needs has us on the cutting edge," Evans said. "No matter where I have been in the United States in the last five years, people are in awe of what we have done and what we have the capacity to do. If there are two-three-four people who need training in a particular area, we can set up and devise a way or method to teach that to our community. The community wins all the way around."

Evans said that he makes a point every day in class to acknowledge the opportunities provided to his students by the community and to make sure they know how rare an opportunity they have.

Both men added that because RTEC is not affiliated with just one college or technical school, the opportunities they can offer the area are nearly unlimited.

"It is a matter of having a can-do attitude. If you think you can do it and are willing to work at it, you can accomplish anything," Svatos said. "If something needs to get done or someone wants a class, don't tell me we can't do it. Let's find a way and the resources to accomplish the task."

TB

patient, Jameson said. A highly infected case may not need as close or extended contact to spread the disease as someone with a lighter case, she said.

A person infected with the TB germ doesn't necessarily carry the actual disease, Jameson said.

"There is preventive therapy to kill off or cause the TB germ to be non-active. Hopefully, you will never develop an active form of the disease," she said. "If you do carry an active case, we can prescribe three or four medications."

In some cases, TB can lie dormant for years without creating problems, Jameson said. The disease might surface and become active in later years as the person ages and develops health problems.

TB carries some symptoms similar to the cold and flu, Jameson said. She encouraged ill persons to look for other signs.

"Don't think, 'It's my winter or spring cold and I just can't shake it,'" she said. "There are symptoms such as night sweats and weight loss that aren't typically found with a cold, flu or other viral illnesses."

South Dakota has maintained a consistent number of TB cases each year, Jameson said. Besides the 18 cases last year, the state recorded 16 cases in 2008 and 13 in 2007.

"We haven't had more than 20 (in recent years)," she said. "The lowest was in 2004 with 11 cases."

TB cuts across all segments of the population and changes each year, Jameson said. In 2009, the state's 18 TB cases were 39 percent Native American, 33 percent white, 22 percent black and 6 percent Asian.

This week's news isn't meant to alarm people, but rather seeks to maintain awareness, Jameson said. She doesn't recommend that people curtail their regular routine.

"We want to make sure that people know TB is a disease that is still around," she said. "You don't hear much about it, but there are several cases reported on an annual basis. If you are identified with a TB infection, there is medication."

and I think 2011 and 2012 will be a lot worse," Gilson said. "I think we really need to tighten our belt and do all we can to keep South Dakota solvent."

Garry Moore, a long-time member of the Legislature who lost a bid for re-election in 2008, said he will be running for one of three open seats on the Yankton County Commission. So far, two incumbents — Bruce Jensen, a Republican, and Allen Sinclair, a Democrat — have filed for the race. Commissioner Bill Tamisiea said he will not run again.

Moore said he will run as an independent because he does not believe party politics should be a factor in local offices.

"I've had a lot of people encourage me to run for the County Commission, and a lot of people encouraged me to run for the state Legislature again," he said. "I guess the deciding factor was, 90 percent of them said, 'You can do us more good at the local level than you can at the state level. They've lost their mind in Pierre. There's some sanity at the local level.'"

Moore said he had taken out a petition to run for the District 18 Senate seat, but a couple of trips to Pierre during this legislative session made him change his mind.

"On the way home, I got to thinking about it and said, 'Those people are right. There is total chaos in Pierre. They don't know whether the dog is shaking its tail or the tail is shaking the dog,'" he stated.

Moore began circulating his nominating petition for the County Commission Tuesday. He said he feels he can work on real problems at the local level and have an impact on people.

"We need to continue to look at development in the county," he said. "I don't just mean housing, I mean development in our rural communities and the ag sector. We've got to work in concert with one another in all the communities. Otherwise, we're all going to fail. I don't see enough effort being put into rural communities in this county, and I don't see enough people attempting to work together."

It was also announced Tuesday that Brian Hunhoff has filed his petition to seek re-election as the Yankton County Register of Deeds.

Dan Thompson, a Democrat, and Jim Vlahakis, a Republican, have previously been reported as candidates for the Yankton County sheriff position.

Candidates affiliated with a political party have until March 30 to file petitions for the June 8 primary election. Independent candidates have until June 8 to file petitions.
