Tuition and fees at South Dakota State University, the state's largest public university, are about $8,100 for a resident student this year. Johnson said the loan default rate for South Dakota public university students was only 4 percent in 2009, much lower than the national default rate of 6.4 percent. Johnson and other university officials said the low default rate is an indication that students are getting jobs that allow them to repay those loans. "They're paying their debts because they can," Regents Executive Director Jack Warner said. Johnson said regents are using more programs to help students stay in school, but those programs operate on limited budgets. Another problem is that 80 percent of the students hold jobs while attending school, Johnson said. "That's probably the No. 1 issue why students don't com-

- Roy Anderson Post, American Legion, of this city, has adopted a resolution by which it is sponsoring and advocating as a department project, the creation of a state institution to which boys and girls of the state may be sent when, through no fault of their own, it becomes necessary for juvenile authorities to take them away from their homes or provide homes by committing them to some institution.
