DAILY DOSE

BY JAMES D. CIMBUREK

james.cimburek@yankton.net

I know, everybody and their dog — or octopus, or elephant or any other animal you can think of — has made a prediction on how Sunday's rematch between the New York Giants and New Éngland Patriots will go.

That doesn't mean that I should throw my hat into that ring. The last time these teams met on this stage, it was an underdog Giants team ending the Patriots' run at a perfect season, much to the pleasure of Mercury Morris and the '72 Dolphins, who remain the only perfect team in NFL history. Earlier this season was a similar outcome, as the Giants scored a 24-20 victory in Foxboro,

My Super Bowl Pick ...

What will be different this time around? Plenty. First off, the Patriots will have more film and more time to find a way to slow down the Giants' pass rush than they did in November. Of course, New England has a pass rush of their own, and Giants QB Eli Manning was sacked six times against San Francisco in the NFC title game

Both teams have plenty of playmakers on offense, but the Patriots' offensive strengths, namely their tight ends, match up with the Giants' weakness defensively. Vernon Davis torched New York in the NFC championship, and the Pats have two tight ends that are just as good. Rob Gronkowski may be hurt, but I still expect

The Patriot defense has been maligned at times, but I think they give New England just enough. My final pick: Patriots 27, Giants 21. Agree? Disagree? Let me know.
