75 YEARS AGO

- Governor Jensen said today he was so "stunned" by action of senate democrats in blocking emergency provisions of the old age assistance bill that he "wanted additional time to consider the matter before making a further statement." Jensen referred to Saturday's action during which democrats refused to approve an emergency clause to make the bill effective immediately.
- Coming back after a weak start in the first half, the Yankton high school Bucks won their first Eastern South Dakota conference victory of the season last Saturday night when they managed to outlast a stubborn Bobcat five in registering a 21-17 win at Brookings.

- Demonstrating figure skating Sunday afternoon at the Yankton boat basin will be Gary Jonas and Michaelene Miernik along with other members of the Sioux City Figure Skating Club. The club will put on a free exhibition of figure skating techniques with the performance including six solos, three "pair" exhibitions, and four dance routines, all wearing special skating costumes.
- James M. Lloyd was presented a certificate and pin, in recognition of his 45 years of service to the Yankton county chapter of the American Red Cross at a dinner attended by some 30 members of the Red Cross board and their wives Wednesday evening. Lloyd has served as a member of the board and as chapter treasurer ever since 1917, when the chapter was formed.

Expansion

columns would make the overall building look better.

"One of the columns hides the join between the old library and the library addition, so rather than have an abrupt transition from old building to new construction, this would hide it," he said.

Council member John Grayson spoke in favor of the columns, saying, "There's no doubt that we are being good stewards of taxpayer money, but I also think we owe it to our city to make the most attractive streetscape that we can."

Several council members expressed concerns that including the columns could be a risky budgetary move.

Council President Kent Osborne said that while he could see how the skylights would impact usability and enjoyment of the library, "It's a little harder for me on the columns."

Council Vice-President Howard Willson said he was not against the columns, per se.

"I'm against the fact that it's outside our budget realm," he said. "I don't like to be spending money that's outside our budget realm when I know that we're already going to fight very hard in 2013 just to come up with a balanced budget."

Willson added that additional expenses could be accrued when workers begin to modify the existing building.

The architect estimated the project should have a contingency of approximately $200,000, Prescott said.

Flanagin said if the council decided "that they can't afford $28,500 on a $2.4 million project, I would say fine. I won't fight you to the death about it. But I think they'd be nice to have."

Mayor Jack Powell said $28,000 should not be looked on as "chump change."

Ultimately, the City Council unanimously approved a motion including alternates one and three. They were split on the inclusion of alternate two, with Powell calling the vote in its favor.

The proposed expansion project will include adding more than 11,000 square feet of space between a proposed first floor and basement addition north of the current building. An additional 780 square feet of space will be added on the south end.

Last year the City Council had appropriated $1.4 million in second penny money, a Community Development Block Grant that brought in approximately $192,500 and a longtime University of South Dakota library science professor had donated $800,000 toward the project before she passed away in July.

At Monday's meeting, Flanagin said the library board also contributed $138,000 — virtually all its resources — and raised more than $200,000 for interior furnishings.

"A year ago, we weren't even talking about the library because we didn't have any money," Powell said. "And we're scraping dollars wherever we can get them, we've gone out to our public, we do things inside so we can get the library that we deserve."

Kerrey

"I think the seat is lost," he said.

That Democrats' best hope was Kerrey, who left the Senate and the state more than a decade ago, reflects the lack of depth on the state's Democratic bench. The party now must find someone to run as little more than a placeholder at the top of the ticket. And the filing deadline for anyone already holding an elected office is next Wednesday.

"There are a lot of things we will be looking at in a very compressed period of time," said Democratic Sen. Steve Lathrop of Omaha, who has expressed interest in the seat. "I think there are always challenges, even when you have two years to run for office."

Democrats already have lost one touted prospect in Kim Robak, who served as lieutenant governor under Nelson in the 1990s. Robak, now a lawyer and lobbyist in Lincoln, said she doesn't feel she would have enough time to raise the money for an effective campaign.

"There is the potential for somebody who wants to spend the time and energy — who is able to spend the time and energy," Robak said.

University of Nebraska Regent Chuck Hassebrook also said he is interested in running. Three others have filed for the Democratic primary, but none have held public office and only one has reported having any money on hand for a campaign.

Conservative groups already had been running anti-Kerrey ads in anticipation of a run, but Republicans now will be able to focus on a slew of other states — including Missouri, Wisconsin, Ohio and Virginia — where they believe they have a good shot at turning Democratically held seats.

"Kerrey's decision to stay in New York is a blow to the Democrats' hopes of holding their Senate majority and reiterates why we believe Nebraskans will elect a fiscally-responsible, conservative Republican senator next fall," the National Republican Senatorial Committee said in a statement.

The GOP's Senate primary ticket in Nebraska already is crowded. It includes state Attorney General Jon Bruning, state Treasurer Don Stenberg, state Sen. Deb Fischer, and investment adviser Pat Flynn. A fifth candidate, Steven Zimmerman, has filed for candidacy, but has raised no money since joining the race last year.

Offering cremation and offering on-site cremation are two entirely different options.

When other funeral homes say they offer cremation, they use other facilities...sometimes far away. We, on the other hand, don't have to so much as leave the front door. Our on-site crematory is just one way we show that closeness counts.

Guiding and serving families with compassion and trust.
