Residents Reminded To Clear Sidewalks

The City of Yankton is asking residents to remember that children walk to school in all weather, including snow. Clear sidewalks make it safer and easier for students and for all our neighbors traveling to and from work or school.

Property owners who have snow or ice covered sidewalks adjacent to their property must make arrangements for snow removal within 24 hours after a snowfall. Snow removed from driveways, sidewalks, or parking lots cannot be placed in the streets.

If you have any questions or need to report a problem sidewalk, contact the City of Yankton at 605-668-5251.

Johnson Seeks Summer, Fall Intern Applicants

WASHINGTON — As students begin to plan for their summer and fall semesters, Sen. Tim Johnson (D-S.D.) is now accepting applications for summer and fall internship positions in his Washington, Sioux Falls, Rapid City and Aberdeen offices. Johnson is also accepting applications for internships with the Senate Banking Committee.

The Washington internship program matches interns' interests to South Dakota and federal issues and provides a firsthand opportunity to experience a wide-range of office duties. Interns may attend hearings, research issues for projects, and work with the office administrative staff. Students may also apply to intern in the press shop for Johnson. Press interns work on tracking media coverage, organizing clips, writing releases, and other various press shop activities, as needed.

Internships in Johnson's state offices will provide students with in-depth knowledge of current issues affecting the state and the opportunity to work directly with South Dakotans. An intern in a state office will assist staff with special events, constituent casework, and administrative functions.

Johnson is Chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, and is accepting applications for internships in that Committee. Interns with the Banking Committee will assist the Chairman's professional staff with administrative, press, legislative, and correspondence duties. Additional information about Committee internships is available at http://banking.senate.gov.

College sophomores, juniors and seniors are encouraged to apply for Johnson's summer and fall internship program. College credits or a stipend are available. To apply for a state office internship, please call toll-free at 1-800-537-0025. To apply for a Washington internship, interested students should submit a cover letter, resume, references, and a writing sample to:

• GENERAL INTERNSHIP — Senator Tim Johnson, Attn: Intern Coordinator, 136 Hart SOB, Washington, DC 20510, By Fax to: 202-228-7575, By Email to: Intern_Coordinator@johnson.senate.gov.

Ethanol Hit By Supply-Demand Crunch

BY DIRK LAMMERS

Associated Press

SIOUX FALLS — Falling fuel demand, an ethanol oversupply and high corn costs could lead some Midwest biorefineries to cut back or idle production until profit margins improve, industry analysts say.

Troy Gavin, general manager of the Midwest Renewable Energy ethanol plant near Sutherland, Neb., said the 28-million-gallon-per-year plant is halting production for a period of up to eight to 12 weeks because of the supply-demand imbalance.

"It's got to work itself out of the system, and it will," Gavin said Monday.

Ethanol futures on the Chicago Board of Trade have dropped nearly 50 cents over the past five months to $2.21 a gallon, and corn, the alternative fuel's primary feedstock, is hovering around $6.36 a bushel.

Meanwhile, ethanol stocks as of Feb. 3 climbed to an all-time weekly high of 21.1 million gallons, according to the Energy Information Association

"We went from some of the best margins we've ever seen to some of the worst in 30 to 45 days," Gavin said. "That is volatility like no other industry."

Rick Kment, a Nebraska-based ethanol industry analyst for agricultural data company DTN, said much of the lackluster demand is seasonal Ethanol is blended into gasoline, so a driver pumping fewer gallons affects both industries. And fuel demand typically drops during the winter months between the holiday travel season and their spring-summer road trips.

Kment said larger ethanol plants will likely cut back on production rather than go cold, as a shutdown can be more disruptive.

"That way they can jump back into it when margins improve," he said.

Another contributing factor could be the Jan. 1 expiration of the 45-cents-per-gallon blender tax credit. Although it didn't go directly to ethanol producers, it had been an incentive for oil companies to buy ethanol and blend it with gasoline, said Matt Hartwig, spokesman for the Renewable Fuels Association.

"Part of that might be a little market adjustment with the tax credit going away," Hartwig

Last week, Archer Daniels Midland Co. announced it was closing its ethanol plant in the North Dakota city of Walhalla, ending 61 jobs. The company said the plant wasn't profitable enough because of its geographic location and Kment said ADM's announcement seemed to be more of a corporate strategic decision rather than one based on industry profit margins.

Volatility in 2008 led to the bankruptcy of VeraSun, then the nation's second largest ethanol producer.

As skyrocketing corn costs began cutting into ethanol producers' profits, many tried to control costs by hedging, which sets future prices for corn sellers while helping buyers avoid the risk of volatile price swings by letting them lock in at a set cost.

happen next year," Wymar said.
"There is no question that there is much concern about Iran being able to build nuclear bombs or weapons. This is not just something you heard in Europe and the United States, but in Iran's neighboring countries."

Wymar discussed a concern held by some that Israel would bomb Iran's nuclear facilities, as they did in Iraq and Syria.

He added that Israel's leaders "pretty much suspect that President Obama would have no choice at this time but to support them" because of the upcoming election.

"If he gets re-elected, he wouldn't have to worry about those votes any longer, so they know that their window of opportunity to hit the Iranians is right now," Wymar said.

Donahue said a nuclear program does not necessarily indicate Iran is building weapons, per se. Instead, it could allow them to exert a greater influence on the Middle East.

"But in reality, a lot of what they're doing there is to try and make (nuclear material) weapons-grade," he said.

The situation is further complicated by "the rhetoric they continue to spew, and their tacit support for some factions and some entities which have terror-istic tendencies," Donahoe said.

Moderator Tom Sorensen, associate dean of the USD School of Law, said the United States is doing what it can to discourage the continuance of this program through an executive order the president signed in November.

Under this order, the United States is putting pressure on entities who are or potentially are engaging with Iran in ways that may lead to nuclear development.

"Reading some of the open source documents leads me to believe they're not as far along currently with their nuclear program and nuclear weapons that we're at that point where it's the point of no return," Donahoe added.

That point would become apparent if the U.S. stopped trying to work the situation diplomatically, he said.

"Even though we don't have formal diplomatic ties, we continue to work through intermediaries, work through other avenues," Donahoe said.

An audience member asked if Iran might see an uprising similar to those seen over the past year in a number of Middle Eastern and African nations.

Wymar said this was not very likely.

"They don't tolerate any opposition, and they are very radical in fighting this," he said.

Additionally, there is little chance of deposing Iran's leaders with the help of the U.S. because of the CIA's involvement in putting the Shah of Iran into power, he said.

"Iranians are very leery about too much U.S. involvement because it has not always been to the benefit of Iran," Wymar said.

Donahoe explained that even though Iranians take part in elections, the candidates are taken from a list approved by those already in power.

"You've got all these sets of checks and balances to make sure that certain entities remain powerful and influential," he said.

As a result, it is more difficult for the Iranians to rise up than it was for the Egyptians, Donahoe said.

"Instead, possibly it's going to take decades as some of the older folks who were there during the Iranian revolution pass on, and then some of the more radicalized folks in the current generation ... at least begin to look at what they want in the future," he said.
