Funding

Nelsen said the district maintains an $8.8 million budget, and spent $992,000 on special-education services last year. The district has 720 students, and 15 percent qualify for special-needs services.

“At the end of the day, you have a responsibility to the kids,” Nelsen said. “You have to do what’s right for them, and that is going to involve spending money.”

Schools in Grand Island have also had to dig into their local general funds to cover the cost of school psychologists, nurses and other staff who help special-needs students, said Virgil Harden, the district’s executive business director.

“Maybe they’re wheelchair-bound, or maybe they’re just learning disabled,” Harden said. “All kinds of students come to us at different levels. We have an obligation to (offer services), and obviously we aren’t going to back away from that. If the state doesn’t send us that appropriation to cover those costs, then it gets covered by the general fund — and it takes away resources that we have for non-special education students.”

Special-education funding is a major part of the overall school-funding debate, but it’s particularly important for smaller schools.

The funding formula that distributes general aid to schools is based on land values and student enrollment. That formula favors larger, urban schools that have lower land values and larger student populations. Smaller districts with valuable, taxable farm land and declining student numbers receive less — but special-education funding goes to all schools that have special-needs students.

Sen. Kate Sullivan, the chairwoman of the Legislature’s Education Committee, said she hopes to advance a bill this year that would give districts more flexibility to grow their own budgets.

Sullivan, of Cedar Rapids, said lawmakers will need to be cautious as they decide how much to spend in general state-aid to schools. The funding is expected to grow somewhere between 5 percent, the amount proposed by the governor, and 10 percent, the increase that will happen automatically if current state law remains unchanged.

“Yes, our economy may be on the upswing, but we’re still going to continue to be cautious,” Sullivan said. “We can’t get overly optimistic. That’s just the reality of it. As much as we value education in this state — and I think people want to see it increased as much as possible — we just have to temper that a little bit.”

Speaker of the Legislature Greg Adams, the previous committee chairman, said schools have become more aggressive in seeking special education funding after cutbacks in other types of state aid.

“I think the school districts have made the case that there is a need,” Adams said. “Personally, I’m not sure that they’ve been as vocal in the past as they have been in the last year or two. They’ve having to cover the cost regardless, and this gives them a little relief.”

Local Schools Earn Honors At State One-Act Festival

From P&D Staff Reports

BRANDON — Yankton High School’s entry in the South Dakota State One-Act Play Festival won a superior rating during the competition, held Thursday through Saturday in Brandon.

Meanwhile, several other area schools also won accolades in the event sponsored by the South Dakota High School Activities Association.

The YHS production of “Hush: An Interview with America” was directed by Keith Goeden. A local public presentation will be held at 7 p.m. tonight (Monday) at the YHS/Summit Activities Center theatre.

Yankton also won an Outstanding Ensembles award. The cast included Alexa Berg, Sarah Santos, Paden Schmidt, Tom Kellen, Jacob Bies, Alex Rehurek, Lexi Fokken, Jack Tramp, Maddie Manning, John Iverson, Mitch Riibe, Cole Modregger, Garner Brandt, Kayla Sylvester, Payton Terca, Gabe Swenson, Chris Eldred, Susana Kinsley, Kevin White, Shane Wright, Levi Schaefer, Evan Schade, Hannah Horn, Gabby Slowey, Jenna DeBoer, Alanna Binder, Jeryka Goble, Cody Geary and Haley Baugh.

In Class A, Vermillion’s production of “Midwest Side Story” won a superior rating, as did Dakota Valley’s production of “The Chair Play.” Vermillion’s play was directed by Mary Begley, while Anna Michaelson directed the Dakota Valley production.

For Vermillion, Sam Pearson, William Card, Allison Howe and Nathan Ford won Outstanding Individual honors. VHS also won an Outstanding Ensembles honor; the cast included: Natalie Swanson, Rachel Axtell, Jacob Ford, Meghan Cameron, Jim Yao, Marissa Brady, Leah Geis, Ruth Murphy, Adam Ahmed, Dustin Fischer, Katie Zimmerman, Savannah Kirsch and Morgan Fuller.

Dakota Valley’s Ben Vik and Scott Saager won Outstanding Individual citations.

In Class B, Menno won a superior rating for its production of “Nora’s Lost.” The production was directed by Betsy Knodel and Kay Smidt.

In the Outstanding Individual category, Menno’s Christina Herboldt, Tyrell Bertsch, Courtney Schaeffer, Alex Ulmer picked up citations. Also, Carly Sparks, Hannah Wold, Riley Harrington, Courtney Krsnak of Armour won individual honors for the production of “Before We Go.”

Lottery: Beware Of Powerball Scam

ST. LOUIS — The South Dakota Lottery is urging players to not be taken in by a scam that promises them a cash prize in return for personal information.

Lottery officials were notified by a player that they had received an e-mail from an individual claiming to be with the “Powerball Company” and advising them to provide personal information including Facebook and email account passwords to receive their $50,000 prize. The individual contacted was also told that a claim fee had to be paid before the money could be collected.

Lottery executive director Norm Lingle reminds the public that his agency does not make such demands.

“The Lottery doesn’t ask a winner to pay money upfront to claim a prize nor do we request personal information such as passwords to your social media and email accounts,” Lingle said. “If you receive an email or Facebook message that is making such requests, it’s a scam and should be deleted immediately.”

Lottery prizes of $101 or more must be claimed at a Lottery office in Pierre, Rapid City or Sioux Falls using an official prize claim form. For more information on avoiding lottery scams, visit <http://lottery.sd.gov/responsibly/scams/>.
