adults," he said. "Some of the provisions in the Affordable Care Act provide coverage for those adults. Having the program here would be a big thing for healthcare and the work force in the state."

Rep. Hunhoff added that Medicaid expansion in South Dakota is inevitable, but it is more of a matter of how fast it happens. He said the program is critical to both large and small hospitals across the state and region.

On the other hand, Sen. Hunhoff said she is concerned with the federal allotment of money for states to fully enact the Medicaid program.

"Are the feds going to be able to provide all the funding they are promising?" she asked. "It's the real elephant in the room in this situation. I'm for expansion, but I don't want the burden to eventually be put on the taxpayers of South Dakota."

Another hot-button issue discussed was education funding.

Stevens believes that, if there is a one-time funding allotment this year, the money should go back to local school boards to make the decision on how to use the funds.

"There have been a lot of different ideas about education funding floating out there," he said. "I think it is up to local school boards to decide how to best educate their children — local control is the best way to do that."

Rep. Hunhoff agreed, and said there are a lot of funding discussions going on in the Legislature each day.

"The big debate has been whether we start to micro-manage education again versus having more local control over it," he said. "It seems like we're moving back towards categorical aid for education. There is only so much money to go around, and we've fallen way behind in education funding in the state."

Sen. Hunhoff said it is always the same discussion each year and legislators must work together to find a comprehensive plan for education and education funding.

Also discussed Saturday was the Human Services Center (HSC) and its proposed demolition of some of its old, unused buildings.

"It's been about 30 years since the (old) campus of the HSC closed," Rep. Hunhoff said. "Gov. Daugaard assured us that he wants to see the historic buildings saved, if possible. Since we're only a few years away from demolition, this is really the last shot to find developers for the historic buildings."

Sen. Hunhoff agreed, saying if the community wants to redevelop the buildings, people must step up now because the Legislature can't continue to postpone the demolition plans.

Stevens said Daugaard is serious about getting input from others on the buildings and what can be done to potentially save them.

Legislators also discussed the recent passing of a prison reform bill, each saying how important the bill is for the prison system and its future.

The next cracker barrel will be held in Yankton on March 2.

so people that go love it. Terry Winter has been a director for many plays in Yankton, including for the Yankton School District and theatre company."

Leibfarth thanked the sponsors of the event and said they can only put on a show due to their generous help.

"Last year, the event raised more than $14,000 for the theatre company, and this year we're hoping to push that number up above $15,000," she said. "All of the proceeds go to the theatre. Last year the funds we received really helped to keep the theater open. Our goal is to keep live theater up and running in downtown Yankton."

The 2012 fundraiser attracted approximately 300 people. Committee members hope to push that number to more than 320 this year.

Leibfarth added that many people don't know how much it takes to keep the theater doors open. The theatre company must have the rights to the shows its presents, plus have directors and costumes, plus the building upkeep — all adding up to a lot of expense.

"We began doing these fundraisers four years ago to keep the theater here open," she said. "After each event is over, we immediately began making the plans for next years event, including putting together our ideas and gathering the entertainment for the night. It takes more than six months of hard work and planning to get each event off the ground."

Leibfarth said she enjoys gathering all the people together that love theater in Yankton to share in the enjoyment of a show that helps out the theatre company.

"This is a very popular event and a really fun night out. I can't describe it any more than, you just have so much fun at the fundraiser," she said.

officials closed a portion of Interstate 29 because of a winter storm.

The Fargo Forum reported that the team and many fans were on their way back from a weekend series in Omaha, Neb., when officials in South Dakota closed Interstate 29 from Watertown to the North Dakota border.

UND assistant athletic director Jayson Hajdu says the team attempted to drive back to Grand Forks on Saturday night but had to pull off the interstate at a truck stop near Summit and spent the night on the bus.

On Sunday, Summit residents opened up a community building and started cooking barbecue for the stranded team members.

Corn Shortage Idles 20 Ethanol Plants Nationwide

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The persistent drought is taking a toll on producers of ethanol, with corn becoming so scarce that nearly two dozen ethanol plants have been forced to halt production.

The Renewable Fuels Association, an ethanol industry trade group, provided data to The Associated Press showing that 20 of the nation's 211 ethanol plants have ceased production over the past year, including five in January. Most remain open, with workers spending time performing maintenance-type tasks. But ethanol production won't likely resume until after 2013 corn is harvested in late August or September.

Industry experts don't expect a shortage — millions of barrels are stockpiled and the remaining 191 plants are still producing. Still, there is growing concern about what happens if the drought lingers through another corn-growing season.

"There's a lot of anxiety in the industry right now about the drought and a lot of folks watching the weather and hoping and praying this drought is going to break," said Geoff

Cooper, vice president for research and analysis for the Renewable Fuels Association.

"If we get back to a normal pattern and normal corn crop, then I think the industry is in good shape," Cooper said. "But if this drought persists and it has the same effect on this coming corn crop, then we've got a problem."

America's ethanol industry has taken off in the past decade. Plants in 28 states produce more than 13 billion gallons of ethanol each year, Cooper said. By comparison, in 2002, the industry produced 2.1 billion gallons. Today, roughly 10 percent of the U.S. gasoline supply is made up of the biofuel.

Roughly 95 percent of U.S. ethanol is made from corn. The National Corn Growers Association estimates that 39 percent of the U.S. corn crop is used in ethanol production.

Corn producers had high hopes going into 2012. Record harvests were predicted.

Then the weather dried up. The drought began before planting and never stopped. Even though more acres were planted in 2012 compared to 2011, 13 percent less corn was harvested.

2 In Custody In Connection To Chicago Teen's Death

CHICAGO (AP) — Two men were taken into custody Sunday as "persons of interest" in the fatal shooting of a 15-year-old Chicago girl, a Chicago police spokeswoman said.

Chicago Police Department spokeswoman Melissa Stratton said the two men, ages 18 and 20, were taken into custody early Sunday morning and are being questioned. She said no charges have been filed.

The development comes one day after Hadiya Pendleton's funeral, which was attended by first lady Michelle Obama and several other dignitaries.

Pendleton was shot to death Jan. 29 in a park that is about a mile from President Barack Obama's home on the city's South Side. Police have said Pendleton was an innocent victim in a gang-related shooting.

Just days before her death, the band majorette was among the performers during events for Obama's inauguration.

Her slaying brought new attention to Chicago's homicide rate, and came in a January that was the city's deadliest in a decade. In 2012, Chicago recorded 506 homicides.

Among the other dignitaries at Saturday's funeral were Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel, Illinois Gov. Pat Quinn, U.S. Education Secretary Arne Duncan, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and U.S. Rep. Bobby Rush.
