

Calvary Men's Fraternity Set To Begin

As the world falls apart around us and evil seems to win, the church needs to realize that the most powerful army available is unaware of its firepower. We are the Men of the Church. Saying A Good Word About Others

BY REV. RON JOHNSON
First United Methodist Church

One of the common threads I see in many of the conversations I've had with persons in the last few months is that there is concern over the perception that the world is full of people who can't say a good word to anyone or about anyone; people who take a perverse delight in squelching someone else's joy, in letting the air out of another's balloon of happiness, in making others feel that what they have to give is not quite good enough.

shrink to be diminished and not only the personal-ity of its target but of its deliverers as well. We look at life largely through our hearts. How we feel, the personal sense of significance we have, and proper self-esteem have much to do with how we respond to life. These are the results of others' opinions and expressions concerning us. We lose self-confidence when proper praise is withheld.

Pope's Resignation To Create Unprecedented Situation

VATICAN CITY — One day soon, perhaps on a fine morning this spring, a new pope strolling through the Vatican's beautifully tended gardens may run into something that few, if any, of his predecessors ever encountered: another pope. Technically, of course, there will be only one reigning pontiff, the man elected by the College of Cardinals after Benedict XVI steps down Feb. 28.

there will be a direct conflict. But the new pope ... will know that he's watched by the old one." Benedict is the first pontiff in nearly 600 years to resign, and the first in even longer to do so willingly. In many ways, the situation is akin to a constitutional crisis brought on by the abdication of a monarch. There's no script, no simple protocol. What do you even call the former occupant of the throne — in this case the throne of St. Peter? The Vatican's genial spokesman, Father Federico Lombardi, candidly acknowledged at a news conference Tuesday that he had no answers yet to some basic questions, including what would be done with the papal ring, which is used as an official seal and by tradition is destroyed when a pontiff dies.

Benedict's vocation as Holy Father, the leader of the flock, is not his to give away, however voluntarily. As Pope Paul VI once put it, paternity cannot be resigned. "The idea of two popes could be really problematic," said Antonio Sabetta, a professor at Pontifical Lateran University in Rome. Tantalizingly, Benedict has been working in these last days of his papacy on a new encyclical, the document of the highest importance a pope can produce, on the subject of faith. It won't be finished before his retirement, Lombardi said, and therefore will go unpublished, at least in encyclical form. But if it appears in a book, there's a danger that it or other such writings could muddy the waters for the new pope, who might feel constrained by Benedict's deeply intellectual teachings or intimidated by what even critics concede is his elegant, limpid prose.

successor, both for the good of the church and to allow himself to enjoy a quiet retirement out of the public eye, with his beloved books and pampered cat for company. "Considering Pope Benedict, who is really interested in studying and praying, I think it won't be a problem," Sabetta said. "Pope Benedict is a very humble man. ... I think he will almost disappear from the scene." After stepping down, Benedict will live temporarily in the papal summer residence at Castel Gandolfo, south of Rome, before he gets himself to a nunnery. Builders are at work now renovating buildings at the monastery that once housed nuns in the Vatican Gardens, which will become his new home. There's a private chapel and a patch of soil where the nuns grew citrus trees and roses, according to The Associated Press. The papal apartment he once occupied will not be far away, but Benedict will settle in, and the Vatican and the Catholic faithful will adjust to the idea of two popes in one place, said John Allen, a veteran Vatican watcher for the National Catholic Reporter.
