

Nielsen To Begin Counting Broadband Viewing Homes

NEW YORK (AP)— The company that measures television viewership said Thursday it will soon begin counting people who watch programming through broadband in addition to the traditional broadcast or cable hook-up.

Nielsen's move is a significant step toward recognizing a world where the definition of TV viewing is swiftly changing and toward satisfying clients concerned that the company isn't keeping up with those changes. Separately, Nielsen is developing ways to track content on tablets and mobile phones.

For many years, roughly 99 percent of homes in the U.S. had televisions that received service through broadcast, cable or satellite signals.

Now the number of homes without such service is 4.2 percent — and growing each year. About three-quarters of those homes still have TVs, however, and their owners watch programming through game consoles or services like Netflix and Amazon. Starting September, Nielsen will have meters that can monitor viewership in those homes, said Brian Fuhrer, a senior vice president at Nielsen.

This will add roughly 160 homes to Nielsen's current sample of 23,000 houses nationwide with meters monitoring viewing habits.

More significantly, Nielsen will return to its sample to find homes that have cable or broadcast, but also separate TV sets hooked up through broadband. This will add an estimated 2,000 more broadband sets, significantly increasing the sample size, Fuhrer said.

"Consumers are accessing content in new ways that fall outside of our traditional definitions and if we don't expand ... we could be missing an emerging trend," he said.

Under Nielsen's old definition, there are an estimated 5 million homes in the U.S. without working TV sets, up a total of 3 million from 2007. Nielsen and the industry studied this to see whether people were pulling their plugs because of the recession; instead, the bulk of the new "non-TV homes" were simply watching TV in a different way.

The changes aren't likely to quickly boost the ratings of your favorite program, however. Most of the programs shown through broadband don't have the same encodings as shows watched traditionally, primarily because they often have different advertisements. As a result, Nielsen will be limited in tracking what particular shows are being watched, at least until more universal encoding standards are developed.

stationery. Universal sent every BFCA voter an iPod Shuffle (retail price: $50) pre-loaded with the songs from "Les Miserables."

"I remember thinking, in terms of gifts, this is a bit much," says Access Hollywood film critic Scott Mantz, a BFCA member. "In the 22 years I've been covering awards seasons, I've never seen anything quite like it. When you open up the mail and find a 'Les Miz' iPod, you know we're not in a recession anymore."

Universal said that its "Les Miserables" campaign, which is all but certain to bring a supporting actress Oscar to costar Anne Hathaway, cost less than $10 million.

Harvey Weinstein, whose films "The Artist" and "The King's Speech" won the last two best picture trophies, said the runaway expenditures don't guarantee Oscar gold _ and as the person who mastered the modern, take-no-prisoners awards campaign, he should know.

"I don't believe spending the money necessarily works, as we've proven in the past," said Weinstein, who thinks "Silver Linings Playbook" has a chance to score an upset best picture win. "And any money you spend has to make people go see the movie."

The open-wallet campaigning has left several best picture nominees with less resources scrambling to stay in the conversation.

"We'll see on Feb. 24 how influential those big spends are," said Michael Barker, whose Sony Pictures Classics is releasing "Amour," which is shortlisted for both the best picture and foreign language races. "I'm sitting here with five nominations for 'Amour,' and I think that it received all those nominations is proof that academy members aren't always paying attention to the big campaigns."
