Thoughts On Credit Card Churning

BY DAVE RAMSEY

Dear Dave,
What do you think about the practice of credit card churning? —Ethan

Dear Ethan,
I think it's a pretty dumb idea. The concept is to run up the balance on one card as high as you can, then flip the balance from card to card in order to get perks like airline miles. But if you want to go through all the trouble and hassle over such a small amount of money, be my guest.

I've met thousands of millionaires, and none of them have ever credited their success to credit card churning. Think about it: With all the time you'd spend, and risk you're taking on a scheme like that, you could actually have made some money.

If you want success, Ethan, you have to mimic what successful people do. This means living on a detailed plan, saving, and investing! —Dave

Dave RAMSEY

You guys obviously aren't poor, and any financial advisor who says you need to fake being poor in order to get help is not a person whose advice I want to follow.

Dear Dave,
Both of our daughters will start college next year. We have $25,000 set aside for each in their custodial accounts, but my financial advisor says we should take the money out because it will keep them from being awarded as much in scholarships and other assistance. What do you think? —John

Dear John,
I disagree. It's like saying you should quit your job to get food stamps.

You're not poor, and any financial advisor who says you need to fake being poor in order to get help is not a person whose advice I want to follow.

When your kids apply for scholarships and assistance, your entire financial picture will be assessed. More funding goes to kids from poor families than rich ones, but that's only fair. Chances are, you fall somewhere in the upper-middle portion of the scale.

But no, I wouldn't move the money or try to hide it. It's just not honest to try and act like you're poor when you're not. I don't believe in that kind of stuff. —Dave

VFW Ladies Auxiliary Member Honored

Peterka

South Dakota's President Neta Peterka of Scotland, a member of Paul Grossheusch Auxiliary #2966 joined other key leaders at the 2013 National Mid-Year Conference of the Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States held Feb. 7-10, 2013, in Clearwater, Fla.

The more than 300 members from throughout the country who attended the conference, heard the National President Leanne Lemley of Iowa report on her recent activities and discuss the mid-year progress of their 9 programs, such as Veterans & Family Support, the Young American Creative Patriotic Art Contest and the Hospital program.

High on the list is the status of their fundraising efforts in the Cancer Aid & Research program as members strive to raise $3 million for the Auxiliary's fund, which supports Cancer Research and aids members with cancer. National President Lemley donated $50,000 to the University of Florida Shands Cancer Center for its immunology research.

The 500,000 members of the Auxiliary nationwide are wives, mothers, daughters, and other female relatives of those who have served in the U. S. military overseas during a war or conflict. As when the organization began in 1914, serving veterans continues to be its major goal. Supporting America's active-duty military personnel by shipping care packages and offering free long-distance calling opportunities are just two of the ways the organization serves them today.

BBB Alerting Consumers About Phone Scam

OMAHA, Neb. — The Better Business Bureau (BBB) serving Nebraska, South Dakota, the Kansas Plains and Southwest Iowa is alerting consumers about a phone scam.

People have reported receiving calls from a representative claiming to be from Microsoft. The caller offers to solve their computer problems.

"This is a classic scam: a fake tech support caller claims he needs access to your computer to fix a non-existent bug. But there is a new twist. It involves the caller actually installing a virus on victims' computers. This is a phishing attempt by scammers to gain access to the consumer's computer and steal their personal information," stated BBB President and CEO Jim Hegarty.

The scam usually works like this: You get a telephone call from someone claiming to be with tech support from a well-known software company. Microsoft is a popular choice. The callers often have strong accents but use common names such as "Adam" or "Bill." The scammers may know your name and other personal information, which they get from publicly available phone directories. They might even guess what computer operating system you're using.

The caller tells you that your computer is sending error messages, and they've detected a virus on it. He says only a tech support employee can remove the virus, but first you need to grant him access to your machine. If you give the OK, the caller will run a scan of your files and actually point out how the virus has infected the computer. The scammers then offer to remove the virus ... for a fee. Of course, they need your credit card details first.

Here's the twist: Those who allowed the caller remote access to their computers, whether they paid for the virus to be removed or not, reported difficulties with their computer afterwards, according to the FBI's Internet Crime Complaint Center. Some said their computers would not turn on or certain programs/files were inaccessible. Some victims even reported taking their computers for repair, and the technicians confirmed software had been installed.

WHAT TO DO IF 'TECH SUPPORT' CALLS?

- Never give control of your computer to a third party unless you can confirm that it is a legitimate representative of a computer support team with whom you are already a customer.
- Never provide your credit card or financial information to someone claiming to be from tech support. If the caller claims there is a security threat to your computer, hang up and call your computer company directly.
- Take the caller's information down and report it to your local authorities the BBB or the FTC.
- If you did allow a caller to access your computer:
- Change the passwords for your computer, email and online banking/credit card accounts.

- Be sure to run a virus scan
- Consider placing a fraud alert on your credit report if you shared personal and banking information with the scammer.

The BBB offers the following advice, if you think your computer has been affected by a virus:

- Go through your service provider directly. If you are concerned your computer may be exposed to viruses or other security threats, contact your service provider directly. Some providers offer free tools that can help detect and remove viruses.
- Install virus detection. To help protect your computer from viruses make sure you have virus detection software installed on your computer. This software can also help identify if a virus appears on your computer.
- Find a computer repair company you can trust. Go to bbb.org to find a BBB Accredited Business you can trust.
