Lake

largemouth buffalo, bighead carp and silver carp were introduced into the lake, and their populations have since spiked.

Last August, the Press & Dakotan reported a proposal had been put forth to conduct a "chemical renovation." Within hours, all of the lake's fish — both game and invasive — would be dead and the lake is refilled. After around five to seven days, the toxicity of the lake subsides and new game fish would be introduced.

Entities involved in planning and execution of the renovation include the Gavins Point National Fish Hatchery, Nebraska Game & Parks Commission, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and the South Dakota Game, Fish & Parks Department.

Schuckman said many details of the operation need to be studied before a final plan can be put into action.

"We have a lot of things we need to work out with the Corps," he said. "We don't know how far they're going to let us draw down. There's some sampling that needs to be done — sampling upstream as well — and the guys in South Dakota are going to take care of that."

He said he expects a final plan to be available sometime in late spring or in early summer. Additionally, Schuckman said a rough estimate had been made on costs but wouldn't release the figure as it would be dependent on what the team's findings are in the coming months.

He said the order is already in for the fish meant to repopulate the lake once the invasive species are removed.

"After the fish are killed off, we're going to restock it right away with sport fish," he said. "I've already got bass and blue gill requested for the fall of 2014."

The last time a renovation of the lake had to be conducted was in 1980.

Pressler

"I just felt I should return the favor," Abdallah said.

Don Frankenfeld, a Rapid City economist and lifelong Republican, said Pressler is a candidate with extraordinary credentials and the timing is right for an independent voice. Pressler was first elected to the U.S. House in 1974 during the Watergate scandal when Republicans were losing in droves, Frankenfeld said.

"He ran against an incumbent and won, and I think that was because he was a new fresh, likable face at a time when we were all kind of desperate for somebody who wasn't a conventional politician," he said. "And I think that time is back again."

Johnson announced last March that he was retiring from the Senate seat he has held since beating Pressler in the 1996 general election.

Rick Weiland, an ex-staffer for former Sen. Tom Daschle, is the lone Democratic candidate. Former Gov. Mike Rounds is the most prominent Republican name in a crowded party field that includes Sioux Falls physician Annette Bosworth, Yankton attorney and Army Reserves Major Jason Ravensborg and state lawmakers Larry Rhoden, of Union Center, and Stace Nelson, of Fulton.

Pressler needs to collect at least 3,300 valid signatures by April just to appear on the ballot, and voter registration numbers suggest that he faces an uphill battle if he gets to that point.

Of South Dakota's nearly 508,000 registered voters as of Jan. 15, just shy of 95,000 listed themselves as independent or having no party affiliation. That's a 27 percent increase from the 2006 general election, but the state has nearly 235,000 Republicans and nearly 177,000 Democrats, according to records from the South Dakota Secretary of State's office.

Pressler, a self-described "passionate centrist" or "moderate conservative," is taking the approach that the journey might be more important than the destination.

"We've got this situation that's just deadlocked and it becomes poisonous," said Pressler, 71. "And maybe in my old age I can do something to contribute."
