ance Division to register navigators, make sure they have completed training and check whether they have been convicted of crimes. Registration would cost $50.

The Senate Commerce and Energy Committee has not set a hearing date for the bill.

Kim Jones, coordinator of the South Dakota Navigator Coalition, said navigators educate people about options and obligations in the new health insurance market and help people sign up for insurance policies. She works with 19 navigators in her organization.

The navigator program is overseen by the federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, and the federal government has provided grants to nonprofit organizations in South Dakota and other states to sign up navigators to help uninsured people.

Jones said she thinks current navigators have adequate training, though she would comply with any new regulations.

"It would make the process a bit more complicated," Jones said. "It's not for me to say whether it's necessary or not."

Novstrup said he hopes the program would pay for itself with the registration fees.

"We're doing a very minimal amount of regulation, and that minimal amount of regulation should cost a very small amount," Novstrup said.

House Minority Leader Bernie Hunhoff signed on as a co-sponsor to the bill but has since decided that he won't vote for it.

The Democrat from Yankton said he recently worked with a navigator to set up insurance for his business.

"I think it's unnecessary regulation, the more I learn about it," Hunhoff said.

"We're all trying to keep government simple and reduce duplication and unnecessary paperwork and regulations. This seems to be just an unnecessary burden on the whole system."

Novstrup said he decided to propose the measure after reading that U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius had said the federal government does not require background checks for health care navigators, but the states could do so.

"Secretary Sebelius handed us the particular responsibility to make sure that that particular profession was registered or regulated and licensed," Novstrup said.
