

Mount Marty To Add Club Trap-Shooting Squad

Located in a town already known as an archery hotbed, Mount Marty College is hoping interest in outdoor activities carries over into its newest athletic addition.

Club trapshooting. The school announced Tuesday the formation of a club trapshooting team that will begin competition this spring and hold its practices and events at the Jim River Trap Club — located east of Yankton on Highway 50.

“The location of Yankton, we’re a hub of outdoor recreation activities, just look at archery,” said athletic director Chuck Iverson, referring to Mount Marty’s club archery program that reached top-10 status at a national event in under one year. “We’ll be the best armed, unarmed campus in the nation,” Iverson joked. Like the archers, MMC’s trapshooters will store their equipment off site.

The first college in South Dakota to offer the sport, Mount Marty joins the ranks of a number of big-name schools — as well as smaller, regional ones — to compete in trap shooting.

Schools like Arizona, Arizona State, Colorado, Florida, Iowa, Kansas State and Texas A&M all have club programs, as do Concordia (Neb.), Hastings (Neb.) and Midland (Neb.).

The program will consist of men’s and women’s shooters, who will be coached by Rick Kalsow, a 13-time Amateur Trapshooting Association (ATA) Industry All-American and member of the 2013 Iowa State Elite Trap Shooting Team.

“I know I’m just ready to get this thing rolling,” Kalsow said. “I’m excited to work with the college.”

Getting to this point, though, took a combination of events, Iverson said. The first of which involved Mount Marty’s Dean for Academic Affairs, Susan Kalsow, whose husband is a certified coach in Iowa.

“At our first meeting, he was so excited, he couldn’t stop talking,” Iverson said. “He’s got so much energy and passion for this.”

Next came word that the Jim River Trap Club was looking to branch out and that grant money could be applied for through the National Shooting Sports Foundation (NSSF). Mount Marty officials applied and were notified that it would receive $10,000, Iverson said.

“It all happened so fast,” Kalsow said. “That’s the amazing part.”

One of the key goals in starting a club team, Kalsow said, is to ready a squad that could qualify for next year’s ACUI Collegiate Clay Target Championships — the annual event is typically held in San Antonio, Texas.

“We’ll hardly have our first practices in this year by that time, but hopefully if we get enough kids, next year can be the goal,” he said.

The sport of trapshooting involves clay targets that are launched from an apparatus stationed away from the shooting line.

Certainly there’s more to the sport, according to Jim Barger, who said he hopes it increases in popularity in the region.

“We’re really excited about it,” said Barger, the president of the Jim River Trap Club. “That’s what we have been trying to accomplish, is getting the public to use it.”

Barger estimates the club has between 60-70 Isaak Walton members, but incorporating Mount Marty College should help generate interest.

“Getting these college kids should help spread the word around,” he said.
