"Allie has gone above and beyond to help others," Johnke said. "When she sees there is a need, she doesn't wait for others to take action, but takes it upon herself to create that action and to do what needs to be done."

Other projects undertaken by Thiesse in the past year include Relay for Life, a lemonade stand to aid children with cancer and a fundraiser to help another student attend a leadership seminar.

The student said she usually devotes time to her interests, such as animals and children, but her work doesn't stop there. "If anyone asks for help, I'm normally there," she said.

With much of her time and energy used for volunteer service, Thiesse said the work can get overwhelming and stressful.

healthy relationship situations. "Most teenagers want to do the right thing," he said. "Unfortunately, they're only told 'do the right thing, make the right choices' without being given a skill set to actually do the right thing. So when you come in and you make it fun for them to learn skills they want to use, they love it."

There are three main skill sets the program focuses on. "Skill-set number one is when somebody's at a party and is intentionally using alcohol to facilitate a 'hook-up' — which is actually a sexual assault — how to step in and stop that from happening," he said. "Number two: Ask first before they ever engage in intimacy with a partner. Number three is, we're going to teach them how to open the door for their loved ones to let them know they're always there for them."

The program is also meant to teach students additional lessons they can't always get from schools or parents.

"The main thing is to teach every teenager they deserve to be in a healthy relationship," he said. "They deserve to experience intimacy in a positive way that

However, the end goal keeps her going, she said.

"I just try to look to what the outcome will be, and knowing that I'm helping others makes me feel all right," she said.

In addition to helping her community, Thiesse also sets a positive example for other students at YHS, Johnke said.

"She is a role model and truly depicts the power of one person and the impact that person can have on other individuals and the community," she said.

For those who are interested in getting involved with volunteer work, Thiesse said her best advice is to begin with little steps.

"Start with a small fundraiser and work up from there," she said. "Set goals for how you can help people and keep working at it. It's really rewarding when you're finished."

always is respectful of their boundaries and when you teach students what to look for that's positive, they're more likely to pursue that. Typically we make the mistake as parents and communities of telling teens what not to do — and they stop listening because who wants to be told what not to do in life — versus telling them what to look for. And we come in and tell them, 'This is what a healthy relationship looks like: Equal respect — you can talk to each other about anything, you don't do anything unless you feel completely comfortable and at all times you feel like you have a voice.'"

Throughout the 50-minute presentation to YHS students Monday in the Summit Activities Center Theater, Domitrz helped demonstrate each point through both discussion and interactive demonstrations involving students.

Domitrz also spoke to students at the University of South Dakota Monday night.
