Hy-Vee Triathlon In Iowa Discontinued

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The Hy-Vee Triathlon in Iowa, once the world's richest such event, has been discontinued.

Hy-Vee, the Midwest-based grocery chain, announced the decision in a recent email to potential participants. The event had been held in either downtown Des Moines or neighboring West Des Moines since 2007.

The total purse for the triathlon reached as high as $1.1 million before being reduced to $500,000 in 2013.

Hy-Vee says it is exploring "new avenues" for health and wellness promotion, including an event for children and families. The company says more information on that proposed event will be released in March.

Dorsett Played 'Not Knowing' Dementia Could Result

DALLAS (AP) — Hall of Fame running back Tony Dorsett says he started playing football "not knowing that the end was going to be like this" — what he calls a frustrating battle with a condition caused by head trauma that can lead to dementia and depression.

The former Heisman Trophy winner at Pittsburgh and Super Bowl champion with the Dallas Cowboys was diagnosed in 2013 as having signs of chronic traumatic encephalopathy, a degenerative brain condition. Dorsett told Dallas-area radio station KTCK-AM 1310 last week that he loves football and it was "good to me."

"It's just unfortunate that I'm going through what I'm going through," Dorsett said. "I'm in the fight, man. I'm not just laying around letting this overtake me. I'm hoping we can reverse this thing somehow."

In a lengthy interview with The Associated Press in 2012, Dorsett discussed the toll his football career took on his body and brain, detailing a helmet-to-helmet hit in a 1984 game that knocked him out. He called it the hardest hit he ever took.

"That ain't the first time I was knocked out or been dazed over the course of my career, and now I'm suffering for it," Dorsett told the AP three years ago. "And the NFL is trying to deny it."

Dorsett and thousands of former players have accused the NFL of long hiding what it knew about concussions and brain injuries to keep players on the field. The 60-year-old Dorsett opted out of a settlement between the NFL and former players that could end up paying out $1 billion. He said he wanted his case to stand on its merits.

Dorsett rushed for 12,739 yards in 11 seasons with the Cowboys and one with Denver. He won his only Super Bowl when he was a rookie after the 1977 season. He told the radio station he often forgets how to get to places he's visited for years. He has previously said he was troubled by short-termed moments with his family.

"Some days are good. Some days are bad," Dorsett told the radio station. "I signed up for this when, I guess, I started playing football so many years ago. But, obviously, not knowing that the end was going to be like this."

Dorsett held the NCAA career rushing record for 22 years with 6,082 yards at Pittsburgh before Texas' Ricky Williams broke it in 1998. He said he'd still encourage young athletes, including those in his family, to play football.

Savage said he hopes the main beneficiary will be college baseball as a whole.

"The (low scoring) era has treated us pretty well — we've been to the College World Series three of the last five years," Savage said. "But for the bigger picture and for the interest in the game, I think it's going to have a significant difference."
