Whichever among the three eventually finished ahead, it appeared likely the winner's share of the vote would be a record low for GOP caucuses in the state. Former Sen. Bob Dole had 26.3 percent support in 1996, when he won.

This time, the economy and the federal budget deficit were top issues, judged more important than abortion or health care. according to a survey of early cau-

Nearly a third of those sureyed said they most wanted a candidate who could defeat Obama, and those favored Romney as a group. Paul and Santorum split the votes of the one in four who called the selection of a true conservative their top priority, and the former Pennsylvania senator also made a strong showing among those who said their top priority was a candidate with a strong moral character as well as among late deciders.

Paul had an edge among younger and first-time caucus goers. The survey by Edison Media Research for The Associated Press and television networks was based on interviews with 1,737 people arriving at 40 precinct caucuses across the state.

Returns from 1,567 of 1,774 precincts showed both Santorum and Romney with 24.6 percent of the votes, Paul with 21.1 percent. Santorum had 26,608 votes, Romney 26,589 and Paul 22,850.

Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich had 13 percent, followed by Texas Gov. Rick Perry, 10 percent, and Minnesota Rep. Michele Bachmann with 5 percent.

Obama was unopposed for the Democratic nomination. Even so, his re-election campaign set up eight offices across Iowa, made hundreds of thousands of calls to voters and arranged a video conference with caucus night sup-

"This time out is going to be in some ways more important than the first time," the president told Democrats across the state. "Change is never easy."

The Iowa caucuses' outsized importance was underscored by the estimated $13 million in television advertising by the candidates and so-called super PACs as well as thousands of campaign stops designed to sway 100,000 or so voters.

Ironically, the weak economy that has made Obama appear vulnerable nationally was muted as an issue here. Despite areas of economic distress, the farm economy is strong. Iowa's unemployment in November was 5.7 percent, sixth lowest in the country and well below the national reading of 8.6 percent.

Robbery

On April 6, 2011, a search warrant was executed at Baisden's mobile home in Vermillion. Among the items found were black watch cap-style hats, a dark blue or black "hoodie" jacket, dark jeans and a neoprene ski mask. Each of these items closely matched items worn by the Fordyce robber.

Also during the search of Baisden's residence, law enforcement seized letters written by Baisden in which he admitted to robbing the bank in Fordyce and intended to rob a bank in Lawton. Baisden had previously pleaded guilty to the Lawton robbery.

A Woodbury County, Iowa, district court judge had dismissed all charges against Baisden, who was then changed with the robberies on the federal level, Duax said.

Sentencing before United States District Court Judge Mark W. Bennett will be set after a presentence report is prepared. Baisden remains in custody.

A date hasn't been set for Baisden's sentencing but will likely occur by this spring, Duax said. On the bank robbery conviction, Baisden faces a possible maximum sentence of 20 years' imprisonment, a $250,000 fine, a special assessment of $100 and not more than three years of supervised release following any imprisonment.

Baisden could be sentenced at the same time for both the Fordyce and Lawton robberies, Duax said.

To his knowledge, Duax believes none of the money has been recovered from the Fordyce hold-up.

Schieffer declined to comment on whether any of the money has been recovered. However, he said the $19,000 hold-up figure listed by authorities was inaccurate and didn't come from Cedar Security Bank officials.

Schieffer declined to list whether the actual amount taken in the robbery was higher or lower than the $19,000 figure. He also declined comment on whether the bank has changed any of its security measures or procedures in response to the robbery.

The Fordyce robbery occurred shortly after 9 a.m., when many of the town's 200 residents were conducting their routine business.

A man brandishing a handgun walked into the bank, approached a teller and demanded money, according to a press release at the time from Cedar County Sheriff Larry Koranda.

The suspect was described as male, approximately 5-foot-10 to 6 feet tall, wearing a dark colored ski mask and dark sunglasses, a dark hooded sweatshirt, blue jeans and camouflage type gloves. The suspect was carrying a dark blue and silver backpack. He was armed with a black handgun.

The December 2010 robbery wasn't the first for the Fordyce bank. A 1995 heist remains under investigation.

However, authorities aren't linking that crime to the 2010 case, Duax said.

"We are not aware of any connection (of the more recent holdup) with any prior robberies," he

Schieffer said he also doesn't see an link between the two robberies.

For him, the news of Baisden's conviction and sentencing ends more than a year of uncertainty for the bank staff and area residents.

'That's the biggest thing out of it." the banker said.

The current Fordyce case is being prosecuted by the U.S. Attorney's office.

According to Tuesday's news release, the robbery was investigated by the FBI, the Woodbury County Sheriff's Office, the Cedar County, Neb., sheriff's office and the Vermillion police department.

"When we park here, we're virtually parking on someone else's land. That's never been an issue trol in the area around Lake Andes last and it isn't a problem now. But we know that, for the future, that year with a record number of coyotes needs to be resolved.' Thanks to Yankton, the Sioux Falls

Formal liturgy and traditional structure are absent from the church's services. Contemporary music and modern technology displaying words to worship songs are used to begin services. From that point, the service is structured to fit the needs of the congregation.

"It's very informal," Tschetter says. "We stop to take time to pray for events and people, incorporate additional music or whatever the need may be. Scripture reading is at the heart of the service and we search for its practical application. We want to learn what that scripture means for each of us — what difference does it make today?"

The first Sunday of each month the congregation observes communion. On the second Sunday, they hold a potluck.

We want to connect with people and do that corporately," Tschetter says. "We believe that a formal church setting sometimes makes un-churched people uncomfortable, so we stay away from that as much as we can. You won't find many traditional church symbols in our building. We want people to feel welcome here regardless of their position in the community, how they dress or their past.'

As part of its outreach to the Freeman community, Fellowship Harvest Community Church has established a "hang out" for teens who want to have something to eat and spend time with their peers following local ballgames. Teens are able to come to the church, enjoy playing games such as foosball, air hockey and ping pong, and find snacks they can enjoy at no cost.

We've had as many as 60 kids here at times," Tschetter says. "We invite the other team to join us, too. We make sure we close it down by 11:30 p.m. so kids are home by midnight. Without that what we call our 'Fifth Quarter' — the kids would be in an atmosphere where alcohol was served. We believe this is a good alterna-

"Wherever people are, that's where I'll go," Tschetter adds. "Sometimes that means I'm in an unconventional setting. A lot of times, you learn more about people outside the church setting because they feel more comfortable talking about themselves. Whether I stop by a bar or the local ag equipment business, what you see is what you get. That's just me.'
